

Acknowledgments

This book would not have been possible without the help of countless friends, colleagues, and complete strangers. Above all, I am grateful to the Ivorians who took time out of their lives to share their experiences, knowledge, and perspectives with me. With Côte d'Ivoire being a country recently at war, these conversations sometimes touched on a painful past. I cannot adequately repay this debt. I can only hope that this book—if it offers nothing else—will help readers better understand Côte d'Ivoire's political history and the complex legacies of its conflict. Giulia Piccolino and Jeremy Speight generously shared their contacts and expertise with me during the early stages of my research and became academic collaborators. Abel Gbala and Bakary Soro provided diligent research assistance. I probably learned more about Ivorian politics from them over countless meals of poulet braisé and allico than anywhere else. Thanks also to Sebastian van Baalen, Manogodjon Binate, Justine Davis, Bernard Die, Krista Desgranges Elkhmri, Yvan Guichaoua, Kathrin Heitz-Tokpa, Joseph Koné, Touré Kougninlin, Benjamin Olagboye, Maxime Ricard, and Michel Silwé.

Roger Petersen, Evan Lieberman, and Fotini Christia at the Massachusetts Institute of Technology encouraged me to ask questions that mattered, even if those questions were hard to answer. They have offered support and practical guidance at each step of my career. Regina Bateson's scholarship and teaching on ethnographic methods were also an early inspiration. My cohort at MIT—Nina McMurry, Reid Pauly, Cullen Nutt, Andrew Miller, Tim McDonnell, Parrish Bergquist, Mayumi Fukushima, Megan Goldberg, and many others—became a second family in Cambridge and provided crucial feedback and support. During a fellowship at the Belfer Center for Science and International Affairs at the Harvard Kennedy School, I received helpful input from Erica Chenoweth, Rebecca Davis Gibbons, Kelly Greenhill, Mariya Grinberg, Dan Jacobs, Tyler Jost, Sean Lynn-Jones, Zoe Marks, and Steven E. Miller. Additional thanks to Erica De Bruin, Kristen Harkness, Jacqueline Hazelton, Adria Lawrence, Shelley Liu, Kai Thaler, and Sarah Zukerman Daly for engaging with early versions of this project.

I completed this book as an assistant professor at the Schar School of Policy and Government at George Mason University. I thank the Schar School faculty and staff for being excellent and supportive colleagues. Ana Arjona, Risa Brooks, Roy Licklider, Paul Staniland, Will Reno, and Yuhki Tajima generously gave their time to participate in a book workshop and provided enormously helpful feedback. Amelia Johnston provided superb research assistance. David Mendeloff facilitated a writing sabbatical for me at the Norman Paterson School of International Affairs at Carleton University. Years ago, Ian Spears at the University of Guelph inspired me to study the problem of armed conflict. I am also grateful to those who reviewed this work and to the editorial team at Cornell University Press for their many constructive comments and suggestions.

Some of the material in this book was published in earlier versions in the Journal of Peace Research and International Security, and I thank these journals for their permission. Parts of chapter 3 were published in "Commander-Community Ties After Civil War," Journal of Peace Research 58, no. 4 (2021): 778–793. Parts of chapter 6 were published in "Insurgent Armies: Explaining Military Obedience and State Formation After Rebel Victory," International Security 46, no. 3 (2022): 87–127. I received generous support from the Center for International Studies at MIT, the MIT GOV/LAB, the Bridging the Gap Project, the Social Sciences and Humanities Research Council, and the Belfer Center for Science and International Affairs.

Finally, I am grateful to my parents, Mary and Orval, as well as my family and friends in Canada who have offered unconditional support during my improbable journey from rural Ontario to a career in political science. The largest thanks belong to my brilliant partner and wife, Saskia. She has supported me in every way imaginable with patience and love. There is no aspect of my work or my life she has not improved. This is dedicated to her.
