

ACKNOWLEDGMENTS

Early on in this project I asked Richard Wolin for his opinion on whether such a book was worthwhile. Besides his encouraging words, I am grateful to Richard for his precious advice along the way and for his kindness to host me at the CUNY Graduate Center in New York as a Fulbright fellow in 2018–2019. I would also like to express my appreciation to Martin Jay, Olli-Pekka Moisio, Markku Peltonen, and Georgia Warnke for their invaluable comments on my arguments. Finally, discerning criticisms by two anonymous reviewers considerably helped me to further clarify and refine the claims advanced in this book.

The bulk of the book was written in the shadow of the pandemic while I was an Academy of Finland Postdoctoral Researcher at the University of Jyväskylä in 2019–2022. At the Department of Social Sciences and Philosophy, I am particularly indebted to Olli-Pekka Moisio for his insight and encouragement. Discussions with students on critical theory, old and new, count among the most gratifying experiences in Jyväskylä. A warm word of thanks is also due to Seija Paananen and the late Lea Naumanen for their practical help.

Cesare Cuttica, Heikki Haara, Aino Lahdenranta, and Antti Lepistö at the University of Helsinki have been constant sources of intellectual and emotional support. Thanks also to my astute colleagues in the General History Seminar, especially Elise Garritzen, Kaarlo Havu, Markku Kekäläinen, Anna Koivusalo, Kari Saastamoinen, Antti Taipale, Laura Tarkka, Tupu Ylä-Anttila, and Soile Ylivuori.

The “European Narratives of Crisis” conference in 2018, organized by the Centre of Excellence in Law, Identity and the European Narratives (EuroStorie) in Helsinki, offered me one of the first occasions to test the central thesis of Adorno’s Gamble. It is only fitting that I was able to make the final adjustments to it as a visiting scholar at EuroStorie in 2023. I am grateful for Kaius Tuori for making this visit possible.

I greatly appreciate my outstanding editors at Cornell University Press. Thanks are due to the Signale series editor Paul Fleming for seeing potential in my manuscript and to the Signale managing editor Kizer Walker and the Cornell University Press editor in chief Mahinder Kingra for guiding me through what was, again, a wonderfully pleasant publishing process.

Michael Schwarz at the Theodor W. Adorno Archive was of enormous aid in helping me to steer my way through Adorno’s unpublished correspondence. Visiting the Adorno archive and writing this book in Jyväskylä, Helsinki, and New York were enabled by the generous funding of the Research Council of Finland (formerly the Academy of Finland), the Fulbright Finland Foundation, the Finnish Academy of Science and Letters (The Foundations’ Postdoctoral Pool), the Ella and Georg Ehrnrooth Foundation, and the Emil Aaltonen Foundation.

“Chief inspectors” Juha Korhonen and Teemu Holmén have been as reliable as one can hope one’s best friends to be. I owe thanks also to the following individuals for their feedback, support, company, or inspiration at the time when this book was coming together: Ali Ali, Melike Çakan, Ritva Eskelinen, Senni Eskelinen, Onni Hirvonen, Merja Holmén, Sanna Huhtonen, Andrea Köhler, Sami

Lalou, Petteri Norring, Suurin Pamaus, Candela Potente, Kenneth Quek, Anssi Salminen, Marianne Sandelin, Juha Siltala, Esa Sironen, Raija Sironen, Pamela Slotte, Joonas Taipale, Punakiven Traktor, and Erkki Vainikkala.

My most heartfelt gratitude goes to my mother, Leena, and my father, Erkki, as well as my sister Sanna and her family. Hanna, my love, theories may well be relative, but baking is not.

The archival documents from the Theodor W. Adorno Archive are used with permission of the © Hamburg Foundation for the Promotion of Science and Culture. An earlier version of chapter 2 and a section of chapter 3 appeared as “Days of the Cavemen? Adorno, Spengler, and the Anatomy of Caesarism,” New German Critique 48, no. 2 (2021): 177–204. I am thankful to Duke University Press for permission to republish it here.
