

Acknowledgments

This project began at Columbia University, where I benefited from an incredible group of mentors, colleagues, and friends. I am particularly indebted to several faculty members who offered intellectual stimulation, mentorship, and meticulous comments on my typically less than meticulous drafts. Richard Betts, the late Robert Jervis, Jeffrey Lax, and Tonya Putnam helped me think more deeply about the empirical and theoretical implications of my project, kept me on schedule, prevented me from deviating too far off course, and offered reassurance each time I thought the project was on a downward spiral. Tonya, in particular, did far more than what was expected of a committee member. She set an example of advising and mentorship that I strive to emulate. I am also grateful to Séverine Autesserre, who took me on as a research assistant and showed me the ropes on research and grant-writing processes.

My Columbia colleagues were equally generous with their time, knowledge, and friendship. Abhit Bhandari, Brian Blankenship, Justin Canfil, Alex de La Paz, Kolby Hanson, Renanah Miles Joyce, Ben Mueser, Stephanie Schwartz, Tara Slough, and Erin York offered feedback on earlier iterations of the project, and Edmund Brose provided invaluable research assistance. Matt Carr and Theo Milonopoulos deserve special recognition for their close friendship and for reading through several chapters, providing feedback that helped sharpen my thinking.

I was fortunate to have spent time at Stanford’s Center for International Security and Cooperation (CISAC), Perry World House at the University of Pennsylvania, and the Dickey Center at Dartmouth, where I refined this project. At CISAC, I benefited immensely from conversations with and feedback from Nandita Balakrishnan, Hyun-Binn Cho, Fiona Cunningham, Colin Kahl, Asfandyar Mir, Michal Onderco, Maxime Polleri, Harold Trinkunas, Sherry Zaks, and Amy Zegart. Lynn Eden went above and beyond the duties of a seminar discussant and provided detailed comments on several chapters. At Perry World House, Jonathan Chu, Mike Horowitz, Lama Mourad, Lauren Pinson, Marianne Potvin, and Robert Shaffer provided valuable feedback on the project in the midst of a global pandemic. At Dartmouth, Polina Beliakova, Tom Candon, Jeff Friedman, Dani Gilbert, Jennifer Lind, Caleb Pomeroy, Abby Post, Kathleen Powers, and Daryl Press were exceptional colleagues.

MIT provided the perfect academic home to finish this project. My Security Studies Program (SSP) colleagues including Taylor Fravel, Eric Heginbotham, Vipin Narang, Rich Nielsen, Ken Oye, Roger Petersen, Barry Posen, Dick Samuels, Caitlin Talmadge, Jennifer Erickson, Laura Kerwin, Elena Capuzzo, Andrew Ortendahl, and Rodney Walkes created an ideal community for finishing the manuscript. Mariya Grinberg deserves special thanks for being a constant source of advice on the project and a host of other issues. SSP graduate students and military fellows, especially Nick Blanchette, Zach Burdette, Daniel Cebul, Kathryn Dura, Marcus Gillett, Mark Hamilton, Ben Harris, Eyal Hanfling, Nina Miller, Trevor Prouty, Julian Rippy, Kunal Singh, Wright Smith, and Raymond Wang, helped me think more critically about the book's arguments and empirics and made MIT a great place to be a junior faculty member.

The project benefited from feedback at various conferences, workshops, and presentations. Participants at the International Studies Association and American Political Science Association conferences and seminars at American University, UC Berkeley, Columbia, George Mason University, Georgia Tech, Stanford, Texas A&M, and the Cato Institute provided feedback that strengthened the argument and empirics. Barry Posen, Austin Carson, Taylor Fravel, Matt Fuhrmann, Mariya Grinberg, Jason Lyall, and Elizabeth Saunders generously took the time to participate in a daylong book workshop, providing phenomenal feedback that helped me reframe the project. At Cornell University Press, Jackie Teoh, the reviewers, and the editorial board helpfully shepherded the manuscript through the publication process, providing comments that helped sharpen prose, arguments, and empirics. I'm also grateful to James at Retropilot for allowing me to use his incredible Global Hawk artwork on the book's cover.

This project would not have been possible without the dozens of government officials, military officers, archivists, and other subject matter experts who took the time to share their insights on drone operations, assist with research, or support fielding of experiments. Many of these individuals requested anonymity because of the sensitive nature of their work, but their contributions were critical. ## ACKNOWLEDGMENTS

Defense College, and the Institute for National Security Studies at Tel Aviv University were all gracious hosts during research trips.

Several organizations provided generous funding that enabled the research. I am particularly grateful to Columbia University, the Smith Richardson Foundation, the Horowitz Foundation for Social Policy Research, the Eisenhower Institute at Gettysburg College, the Morris Abrams Family/JFSA Cleveland, Tobin Project, and the Harriman Institute. Funding from these organizations covered the cost of research trips, surveys, and wargames. I'm grateful to the editors of Foreign Affairs, Journal of Conflict Resolution, and Journal of Politics for allowing me to incorporate elements of previously published work in this book.

Finally, I am incredibly grateful to my family and friends for their love and support. During graduate school, my aunts and cousins provided a second home and made sure I was always well fed. My parents, Alan and Angela, have been supporters from day one. My sister Karin was always generous with her time and talent, helping to refine my prose even when dealing with her own academic responsibilities. Michael Campitelli, Brian Cuce, Matt Green, Reece Johnson, Jeff Lakusta, Alec Lynde, Andrew Nahmias, AJ Seliga, and Steven Tate provided friendship and motivation throughout the writing process. Lansdale physically tore up messy drafts and provided company during late-night editing sessions. Last, but certainly not least, thanks to Jordan for being the best friend, cheerleader, and sounding board anyone could ask for. Thanks for always being there and for allowing me to drone on about this topic for the better part of a decade. This book would not have been possible without you.
