

Acknowledgments

■ The Amherst College Russian Department, through the Julia A. Whitney Foundation, generously funded the 1989 symposium at which most of the essays collected here were first presented. The Russian Department and the Amherst Center for Russian Culture have continued to support this project, assisting with funds for preparation of the volume for publication. Bates College, through the dean of the faculty, covered additional publication expenses. We are also grateful to Jeanne Stolarski, who coordinated all aspects of the symposium and assisted in the production of this volume with her usual good spirits and flawless efficiency. She and Margaret Ferro typed corrections into final versions of all the essays. The excellent copy editing of Nancy Atkinson made further welcome improvements, and we also thank Peter Kahn for his good work shepherding our manuscript through the production process.

For help with bibliographical information, we thank the reference staff at Frost Library, Amherst College, particularly Michael Kasper.

Many colleagues and friends took time to read and offer comments about the Introduction as it went through several drafts. We particularly thank Diana Burgin, Charles Isenberg, Catriona Kelly, and Eve Levin for their helpful suggestions and criticisms. Helena Goscilo deserves a special acknowledgment, not only for her intelligent and thorough response to the Introduction but also for generously providing some of the more obscure contemporary texts we discuss there and for suggesting several of them in the first place. The responses of Caryl Emerson and Helen Tartar to a much earlier version also encouraged us to attempt the more detailed Introduction that now follows.
