

Acknowledgments

This volume grew out of a panel on Stanley Cavell and political philosophy that Tom Dumm and I put together at the 2001 Annual Convention of the American Political Science Association with Hans Sluga, Tracy Strong, and Cavell himself. In the years since then, Tom helped me assemble the rest of the outstanding group of contributors and has always been there to help me sort through the various issues raised by their essays. I am happy to have a chance to publicly acknowledge the extent of my debt to him. Stanley Cavell's own active and generous engagement in this project has been a tremendous privilege for me, as well as a great pleasure. The other contributors to this volume have been exceptionally conscientious and helpful, and I am grateful to them all. I should particularly like to thank Dick Flathman and David Owen for coming up with such fine pieces on such short notice, Tracy Strong for well-timed hints and suggestions, and Hans Sluga for more than ten years of instruction and friendship. Thanks are also due to my editors, Norris Pope and Angie Michaelis, my brothers and sisters, William E. Abraham, Jane Bennett, Richard Eldridge, Jeremy Elkins, Kurt Rudolf Fischer, Lisa Gottreich, Christian Jurlando, Deborah Lowry, James Wallenstein, Eric Wilson, the directors of the Max Planck Institute for European Legal History, and my colleagues at the Department of Political Science at the University of Pennsylvania. My greatest debts, however, are to my daughters and my wife. It is an especial theme of Cavell's that humanity is a learned way of being, and that it is learned in the company of an exemplary friend. I am indebted to Cecilia Meral and Stephanie Zeynep for their demanding pedagogy, and to Yasemin for showing me again and again how to go on.

All of the essays in this collection appear here for the first time, with the exception of my own pieces, "Stanley Cavell and the Claim to Community" and “Political Revisions: Stanley Cavell and Political Philosophy,” slightly different versions of which were published in Theory and Event 8, no. 1 (Winter 2005) and Political Theory 30, no. 6 (December 2002), respectively. I am grateful to the editors for their kind permission to reprint.
