

ACKNOWLEDGMENTS

It is a joy to recall the many people who have made this study possible. First of all, I wish to thank my wife, for her joyful and steady labor in the Lord, and our children: Ava, Cohen, Caeli, and Judah, for the profound measure of joy they have brought to our home. I thank my parents for instilling in their children a love for the Lord and his Church, and for their consistent encouragement and prayers in the Lord's work. For your sacrificial example, I give thanks to God. To my siblings Joshua, Alison, and Nathan: I am deeply grateful for your faith and for the many joys of our life together. These latter days with you are even sweeter than those of our happy childhood. And to Stuart and Hsuan DeLorme, I offer up my thanks for your hospitality to us during the past year and your wonderful example of trust in the Lord.

I express my warmest gratitude to Christopher Holmes and Murray Rae for their supervision of my study while I was a doctoral student. At important moments, your words directed me to voices in the Tradition who shed particular light on the great themes discussed by Didymus. Thank you for your love for the One of whom it is your vocation to speak. I thank my examiners: Adam Cooper, Ivor Davidson, and Angus Paddison, and the two reviewers of the manuscript, for their encouragement, astute reading of my work, and many helpful suggestions for the improvement of it. My conversation partners were invaluable: Mark Gingerich, Dillon Thornton, my father Douglas, and my brother Joshua. By your charitableness and desire to seek the truth, you have each given me a picture of what proper discussion about God demands. And I thank the Right Reverend Sam Sahu of Malaita for inviting me to take on the project in preparation for teaching at the Trinity School for Theology and Ministry (Solomon Islands).

I wish also to thank several communities: the church of Holy Trinity, Port Chalmers, for warmly welcoming my family to New Zealand and relaxing my diaconal responsibilities to the parish during the intensive phase of the project. To the scholarly community of Saint Andrew's Greek Orthodox Theological College, Sydney, I also express my gratitude for their encouragement of various presentations and articles that have—in one way or another—made their way into the fabric of this book. Finally, to our friends at Beeson Divinity School and Christ the King Anglican Church (Alabama), Church of the Cross (Boston), Community Fellowship (Montana), The Stony Brook School (New York), and the Diocese of Malaita (Solomon Islands): we owe you an unrepayable debt of love for your prayers on our behalf. May yours be the joy of unending life in the fellowship of the Trinity.
