

Preface and Acknowledgments

At this place where I am, I cannot be without infinite gratitude to the able mind and caring guidance of Chip Dobbs-Allsopp. It is due to his perceptiveness and patience in seeing something promising in my raw and rugged draft that this book could be carried from nascence to a provisional ending. The strength of his unfaltering support throughout the years is on a par with his unwavering demand for quality; both speak volumes to his dedication and responsibility.

To Dennis Olson, I am immensely thankful for his keen theological insight and pastoral sensibility. His affirming comments have critically recharged my passion and confidence in this project and as a biblical scholar. I am also greatly blessed in that Mark Taylor graciously provided insightful feedback on the philosophical and theological aspects of the book and enabled me to see what my own vision has obscured.

I cannot measure the influence of Choon-Leong Seow's exemplary scholarship on me or the compassionate support he provided throughout my years at Princeton Theological Seminary; to him, I will always be indebted. I give hearty thanks to Katharine Sakenfeld, for the opportunity to share a section of this book with her class, and for a precious friendship when I most needed it. Many thanks are also due to Prof. Jacqueline Lapsley, who was the first to challenge my uncritical assumptions and to introduce ethical criticism to me.

I am thankful for the numerous sparkles of intellectual exchanges with many colleagues whose names could not be enumerated here. I am especially thankful for Elaine James's proofreading and for the friendship, prayers, and support of Alice Yafeh-Deigh and Peter Altmann.

In the process of writing and rewriting, I have had the privilege of receiving constructive feedback on portions of this book from the members of the Old Testament Research Colloquium in Princeton Theological Seminary (ch. 3), from the friends of the Ethnic Chinese Biblical Colloquium (ch. 1, "Delight"), from the participants of the Mid-Atlantic Regional SBL (ch. 1, "Delight" and "Touch"), and the Society of Biblical Literature (two papers derived from the 3rd and 4th chapters).

I would also like to thank my friends who have helped me to balance life and work over the years: Sherry Regan, Haiyan Xu, Charles Leonard, Tom Bothe, Gwen Austin, Brian Bothe, and friends from GETS Theological Seminary. I especially thank God for the colleagues from Global Bible Initiative and GrapeCity, Inc., in whose lovingkindness I do indeed see the trace of God.

Finally, my utmost love and gratitude is reserved for my family—for my parents, Cuizhen Liu and Yubao Zhang, who support me with all their means; for my dearest son, Ari Z. Bothe, whose presence consoles me in my insomniac moments and whose love inspires me to be a more responsible person; and to my departed sister, Xiaoyan Zhang. Her untimely death at the hands of a jealous husband forever alters my reading of qin'â in Song 8:6.
