

Contents

|               |    |
|---------------|----|
| Preface ..... | xi |
|---------------|----|

1. Introduction:

|                                                                                          |    |
|------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|----|
| Ancestors and Exodus in the Historical Booksof the Hebrew Bible .....                | 1  |
| 1.1. The Temporal Sequence in the Historical Booksof the Hebrew Bible .....          | 1  |
| 1.2. The Sequence of the Ancestors and the Exodus .....                                  | 4  |
| 1.2.1. The Continuity and Discontinuity of the Narrative Flow ofGenesis–Exodus ..... | 4  |
| 1.2.2. The Problem in the Scholarly Discussion .....                                     | 7  |
| a. Classifications of the Ancestor Narrative and Exodus .....                            | 7  |
| b. Arguments for J Running through a Tetrateuch .....                                    | 13 |
| 1.3. Preliminary Considerations .....                                                    | 16 |
| 1.3.1. The Literary Horizon of the Investigation:Genesis–2 Kings .....               | 16 |
| a. Overarching Structures .....                                                          | 17 |
| b. The Origin of the Division of the Books .....                                         | 23 |
| c. The Problem of Dividing the Tetrateuch and the“Deuteronomistic History” .....     | 29 |
| 1.3.2. The Problem of the Textual Evidence .....                                         | 35 |
| a. Differences of Textual Evidence .....                                                 | 35 |
| b. Differences in the Arrangements of Books .....                                        | 41 |
| 1.3.3. Methodological Considerations .....                                               | 46 |

2. Analytical Investigation:

|                                                                                                                       |    |
|-----------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|----|
| Markers of the Original Independence of the Ancestor Storyand the Moses/Exodus Story within Genesis–2 Kings ..... | 50 |
| 2.1. Literary Indicators in Genesis–2 Kings for Dividing Genesisfrom Exodus .....                                 | 50 |
| 2.1.1. Anticipatory References in Genesis to Exodus .....                                                             | 50 |
| a. The Bridging Function of the Joseph Story? .....                                                                   | 50 |
| b. Genesis 46:1–5a .....                                                                                              | 55 |
| c. Genesis 15:13–16 .....                                                                                             | 57 |
| d. Genesis 12:10–20 .....                                                                                             | 57 |
| e. Genesis 12:1–3 .....                                                                                               | 58 |
| f. Summary .....                                                                                                      | 60 |

---

|                                                                                                             |     |
|-------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|-----|
| 2.1.2. References to Genesis in Exodus–Numbers                                                              | 60  |
| a. Exodus 1                                                                                                 | 62  |
| b. Exodus 2:24; 6:2–8; Leviticus 26:42                                                                      | 65  |
| c. Exodus 3:1–4:18                                                                                          | 66  |
| d. The Promise of Land as an Oath to the Patriarchs inExodus–Numbers                                    | 66  |
| e. Summary                                                                                                  | 67  |
| 2.1.3. The “Fathers” of Israel in Deuteronomy: Patriarchs or theExodus Generation (and Their Ancestors) | 67  |
| 2.1.4. References in Joshua–2 Kings back to Exodusand Genesis                                           | 69  |
| a. The Ancestors in Joshua–2 Kings                                                                          | 69  |
| b. The Exodus in Joshua–2 Kings                                                                             | 70  |
| 2.2. Additional Indicators for the Division of theAncestor Story and the Exodus Story . . . . .         | 70  |
| 2.2.1. Evidence from Psalms and the Prophetic Books                                                         | 70  |
| a. Psalms                                                                                                   | 70  |
| b. Prophetic Books                                                                                          | 73  |
| 2.2.2. Etiological Narratives in Genesis                                                                    | 81  |
| 2.2.3. The Name YHWH in Genesis and Exodus                                                                  | 81  |
| 2.2.4. The Pacifism of the Ancestral History                                                                | 82  |
| 2.2.5. The Ancestors as “Foreigners” in Canaan                                                              | 84  |
| 2.2.6. The Blessing of Jacob (Genesis 49)and of Moses (Deuteronomy 33)                                  | 84  |
| 2.2.7. Deuteronomy as a Farewell Speech in the LandEast of the Jordan                                   | 85  |
| 2.2.8. The Triple Ending of Israel’s Salvation History inJoshua 21:43–45, Joshua 23, and Joshua 24      | 87  |
| 2.2.9. Time–Spans in Genesis and Exodus–Deuteronomy                                                         | 89  |
| 2.2.10. The Double Withdrawal of Godas the Direct Actor of History                                      | 90  |
| 2.2.11. Problems of the Classical Source Division inExodus–Numbers                                      | 90  |
| 2.2.12. Summary                                                                                             | 92  |
| 2.3. The Ancestor Story as an Independent Text Complex . . . . .                                            | 92  |
| 2.3.1. Concerning the Independence of Genesis 12–50                                                         | 93  |
| 2.3.2. The Promises in the Framework of the Ancestor Story                                                  | 97  |
| a. The Promises to the Ancestors as aRedaction–Historical Problem                                       | 97  |
| b. The Theology of Promise in the Ancestor Story                                                            | 101 |
| c. Open and Fulfilled Promise                                                                               | 104 |
| 2.3.3. Concerning the Literary Sociological Classification                                                  | 106 |
| 2.3.4. Ancestor Narratives and Narratives of the Judges                                                     | 109 |
| 2.3.5. Concerning Religio–Historical Typology                                                               | 110 |
| 2.3.6. The Ancestor Story as Israel’s Tradition of Its Origins                                              | 114 |
| 2.3.7. Summary                                                                                              | 116 |

|                                                                             |     |
|-----------------------------------------------------------------------------|-----|
| 2.4. The Moses/Exodus Story as an Independent Text Complex . . .            | 117 |
| 2.4.1. Exodus without Eisodos?                                              | 122 |
| 2.4.2. Contours of an Independent Moses/Exodus Story                        | 126 |
| a. The Question of the End                                                  | 126 |
| b. The Exodus Concept                                                       | 130 |
| 2.4.3. The Problem of the Beginning of anIndependent Moses/Exodus Story | 139 |
| 2.4.4. Concerning Literary and Sociological Classification                  | 144 |
| 2.4.5. Religio-Historical Typology                                          | 145 |
| 2.4.6. The Moses/Exodus Story as a Tradition ofIsrael's Origin          | 147 |
| 2.4.7. Summary                                                              | 148 |
| 2.5. The Problem of the Primeval Story . . . . .                            | 151 |

3. Synthetic Reconstructions:

|                                                                                                                                            |     |
|--------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|-----|
| The Merger of the Ancestor Story with theMoses/Exodus Story and the Development of theImage of History in Genesis–2 Kings. . . . . | 156 |
| 3.1. The Ancestor Story as Preface to the Moses/Exodus Story . . . .                                                                       | 156 |
| 3.2. The God of the Ancestors as the God of the Exodus . . . . .                                                                           | 158 |
| 3.2.1. Genesis 15                                                                                                                          | 158 |
| a. Recent Discussion of Genesis 15                                                                                                         | 158 |
| b. The Literary Integrity of Genesis 15                                                                                                    | 161 |
| c. Genesis 15 in Its Context                                                                                                               | 162 |
| d. Abraham as Prophet                                                                                                                      | 165 |
| e. Genetic Aspects of the Text                                                                                                             | 166 |
| 3.2.2. Exodus 3–4                                                                                                                          | 172 |
| a. Recent Discussion of Exodus 3–4                                                                                                         | 173 |
| b. The Literary Integrity of Exodus 3–4                                                                                                    | 175 |
| c. Exodus 3–4 in Its Context                                                                                                               | 177 |
| d. Moses as “Prophet”                                                                                                                      | 181 |
| e. Aspects of the Text's Genesis                                                                                                           | 182 |
| 3.3. The Fulfillment of the Promises to the Fathers . . . . .                                                                              | 193 |
| 3.3.1. Joshua 24 as Conclusion of the Hexateuch                                                                                            | 193 |
| 3.3.2. Joshua 24                                                                                                                           | 197 |
| a. Recent Discussion of Joshua 24                                                                                                          | 197 |
| b. The Literary Integrity of Joshua 24                                                                                                     | 198 |
| c. Joshua 24 in Its Context                                                                                                                | 199 |
| d. The Structure and Profile of Statements in Joshua 24                                                                                    | 204 |
| e. Joshua as “Prophet”                                                                                                                     | 208 |
| f. Genetic Aspects of the Text                                                                                                             | 208 |
| 3.4. The Death of Joseph and the Oppression of Israel in Egyptas a Theological Link between Genesis and Exodus . . . . .               | 214 |
| 3.4.1. Genesis 50:25–26                                                                                                                    | 214 |
| 3.4.2. Exodus 1                                                                                                                            | 216 |

---

|                                                                                                                             |     |
|-----------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|-----|
| a. Literary Classification                                                                                                  | 216 |
| b. The Life-Threatening Oppression of Israel in Egypt                                                                       | 217 |
| c. The Exodus as Salvation from Death                                                                                       | 220 |
| d. The Prophetic Psalm, Exodus 15, as the Conclusion of thePresentation of Salvation                                    | 221 |
| 3.5. Redaction–Historical Contours of the Literary Connectionof the Ancestor Story and the Moses/Exodus Story . . . . . | 224 |
| 3.5.1. A Unified Redaction?                                                                                                 | 224 |
| 3.5.2. Other Textual Pieces                                                                                                 | 233 |
| 3.5.3. The Redaction–Historical Relationship to P                                                                           | 236 |
| 3.5.4. The Prehistory of the Literary Connection of the Ancestorsand the Exodus in P and Second Isaiah                  | 237 |
| a. P                                                                                                                        | 238 |
| b. Second Isaiah                                                                                                            | 248 |
| c. Tradition–Historical Changes                                                                                             | 252 |
| 3.5.5. Dating                                                                                                               | 254 |
| 3.5.6. Place                                                                                                                | 258 |
| 3.6. Theological Aspects of the Unified Ancestor andMoses/Exodus Story . . . . .                                        | 259 |
| 3.6.1. Traditions of Origin and Salvation History                                                                           | 259 |
| a. Genesis–2 Kings: Between Tradition of Originsand Future Expectation                                                  | 259 |
| b. The Place of the Salvation History in the History of Theology                                                            | 260 |
| c. The Role of Faith                                                                                                        | 263 |
| 3.6.2. Unconditional Promise and Obligation                                                                                 | 265 |
| 3.6.3. Abraham as a Figure of Compromise                                                                                    | 267 |
| 3.6.4. God as Savior                                                                                                        | 269 |
| 3.6.5. The Promise of Land Sworn to the Three Ancestorsand the Origin of the Pentateuch as Torah                        | 271 |
| a. Hexateuch and Pentateuch                                                                                                 | 271 |
| b. The Theme of the Pentateuch                                                                                              | 274 |
| c. The Promise of Land as Oath and the Formationof the Torah                                                            | 276 |
| d. Reemphasizing Prophecy in the Pentateuch                                                                                 | 279 |
| 4. Repercussions:                                                                                                    |     |
| The Sequence of Ancestors and Exodus in Intertestamentaland New Testament Reception. . . . .                            | 282 |
| 4.1. Reception within the Hebrew Bible . . . . .                                                                            | 282 |
| 4.1.1. Nehemiah 9                                                                                                           | 282 |
| 4.1.2. The Chronicler's History                                                                                             | 286 |
| 4.1.3. Psalm 105–6                                                                                                          | 290 |
| a. Psalm 105                                                                                                                | 291 |
| b. Psalm 106                                                                                                                | 292 |
| c. Psalms 105 and 106 in Their Context                                                                                      | 293 |
| 4.2. Later Receptions . . . . .                                                                                             | 295 |

---

|                                                                                              |     |
|----------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|-----|
| 4.2.1. Sirach 44–50                                                                          | 295 |
| 4.2.2. Sirach 51:12a–o                                                                       | 299 |
| 4.2.3. Baruch 1:15–3:8                                                                       | 300 |
| 4.2.4. Jubilees                                                                       | 302 |
| 4.2.5. 4QDibHam                                                                              | 305 |
| 4.2.6. Testaments of the Twelve Patriarchs                                            | 306 |
| 4.2.7. The Animal Apocalypse and the Apocalypse of Weeks                       | 309 |
| a. The Animal Apocalypse (1 Enoch 85–90)                                              | 309 |
| b. The Apocalypse of Weeks (1 Enoch 93:1–10; 91:11–17)                                | 313 |
| 4.2.8. Fourth Ezra                                                                    | 315 |
| 4.2.9. Second Baruch 53–74                                                            | 316 |
| 4.2.10. Judean and Samaritan Historians                                                      | 318 |
| a. Artapanus                                                                                 | 318 |
| b. Pseudo-Eupolemus                                                                          | 319 |
| c. Pseudo-Hecataeus II                                                                       | 321 |
| 4.2.11. Non-Jewish Historians                                                                | 321 |
| a. Hecataeus of Abdera                                                                       | 321 |
| b. Manetho                                                                                   | 322 |
| c. Lysimachus of Alexandria                                                                  | 324 |
| d. Apion                                                                                     | 324 |
| e. Berossus                                                                                  | 324 |
| f. Summary                                                                                   | 325 |
| 4.2.12 Acts 7                                                                                | 326 |
| 4.3. Summary                                                                                 | 328 |
| 4.3.1. Conceptions Oriented toward the Ancestors                                             | 328 |
| 4.3.2. Conceptions Oriented toward the Exodus                                                | 330 |
| 4.3.3. Mediated and Alternative Positions                                                    | 331 |
| 4.3.4. The Themes of the Ancestors and Exodus as Diverse, Fundamental, Theological Arguments | 332 |
| 5. Conclusion:                                                                        |     |
| Position in the History of Research                                                          | 334 |
| 5.1. Summary                                                                                 | 334 |
| 5.2. Models for the History of the Literary Development of Genesis–2 Kings                   | 335 |
| 5.2.1. The Source Theory                                                                     | 335 |
| 5.2.2. Current Positions                                                                     | 336 |
| 5.3. Continuity and Discontinuity with Other Models                                          | 342 |
| 5.3.1. Pentateuchal Research in the Framework of Genesis–2 Kings                             | 342 |
| 5.3.2. The Fundamental Gap between Genesis and Exodus                                        | 342 |
| 5.3.3. Documentary Hypothesis or Redactional Linking of Separate Blocks                      | 346 |

---

|                                                                                    |     |
|------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|-----|
| 5.3.4. P as an Originally Independent Written SourceCovering Creation to Sinai | 347 |
| 5.3.5. Post-Priestly Redactional Activity                                          | 347 |
| 5.3.6. Open Questions                                                              | 348 |
| a. Resulting Problems for the History of Literature                                | 348 |
| b. History, Interpretation, and Faith                                              | 350 |
| Bibliography                                                                       | 354 |
| Indexes                                                                            | 427 |
| Index of Authors                                                                   | 427 |
| Index of Scripture                                                                 | 437 |