

Acknowledgments

My thanks go first to Rachel, my strong and courageous wife, and to our four amazing children, Anna, Gabriel, Benjamin, and Sean. The completion of my doctoral dissertation at Fuller Theological Seminary (an earlier form of this book) marked a significant moment for me and for my family. I am also grateful to my parents, David and Linda Mann, for their steadfast love, encouragement, and support.

My words of thanks extend to several individuals who influenced my investigation of this narrative. Looking back, it is clear that I owe the inception of my study to Mignon Jacobs, who encouraged me to study the interrelation of function and meaning, and who pointed me towards a fascinating theological word (and its appearance in 2 Sam 16:12), perhaps. I also would like to thank Timothy Finlay for the hours we spent in conversation regarding speech act theory and the ways it might be applied to biblical narrative. I am grateful to Kenneth Waters Sr., who after listening to me summarize my dissertation suggested the title Run, David, Run.

I am especially grateful to Pamela Scalise and John Goldingay, not only for their tremendous insight and sage guidance throughout the dissertation process but also for the ways in which their scholarship and mentorship have deeply affected me. Dr. Scalise continually proved to be exceedingly skilled at performing speech acts that would direct me, at times in subtle ways, to investigate aspects of this narrative that I had not noticed. Dr. Goldingay has profoundly influenced my hermeneutics and my faith, as my family, friends, colleagues, and students can readily attest. I stand as one of the many witnesses who can testify to ways in which Dr. Goldingay has modeled a life of faith that is shaped by Scripture.

Finally, I wish to thank Stephen Chapman, the external reader for my dissertation, who suggested that I send it to Eisenbrauns for consideration to be published. I appreciate the helpful comments and suggestions of the Siphrrut editors, who not only recommended that I reduce much of the technical jargon but also challenged me to focus my attention more fully on the function of theology in these narrative speech acts. This book is quite different from the dissertation and is a much-improved contribution that I happily offer to everyone who is interested in speech act theory and/or biblical theology.

Abbreviations

Abbreviations in this volume follow the conventions listed in Patrick Alexander et al. (eds.), The SBL Handbook of Style for Ancient Near Eastern, Biblical, and Early Christian Studies (Peabody, MA: Hendrickson, 1999).

