ACKNOWLEDGMENTS

I wish to thank Daniel Selden, professor of comparative literature at University of California-Santa Cruz, for inviting me to write a survey of Akkadian literature. What started out as an essay turned into a book. Without his invitation and encouragement, I would likely never have undertaken the task, which was more difficult and more enjoyable than I would have ever guessed. I also wish to thank University of the Pacific in Stockton, California, where I have taught for the last thirteen years. A summer research grant freed me from teaching and gave me the time to write the lion's share of what follows, and an internal grant covered the costs associated with the licensing of images in the book. I also extend my thanks to the interlibrary loan staff at the university library, especially Monica Schutzman, who patiently provided essential research support. Finally, I offer heart-felt thanks to those who read preliminary versions of this book in 2015 and 2016, including Benjamin Foster, Christopher Hays, and Daniel Selden; to my student Ziadelyn Mercado, who read chapters with me as I revised in the fall semester of 2017; to the two anonymous academic reviewers, who read the penultimate version of the book in the late summer of 2018; to Jeffrey Cooley, who commented on the Conclusion; and to Jim Eisenbraun and James Spinti, who shepherded the book through the publication process. The final version of the book is better for all of the suggestions, criticisms, and insights I received from these generous individuals. I alone, of course, bear sole responsibility for any errors, infelicities, or misjudgments.
