

ACKNOWLEDGMENTS

This book is a revision of my dissertation, which I completed at the University of Texas at Austin in August 2015. It is a joy, now, for me to thank the people who played a key role in the development of this project from its inception as a dissertation topic to its production as a book. First of all, I thank my teachers John Huehnergard and Jo Ann Hackett, who served as my supervisor and co-supervisor, respectively. John taught me comparative Semitics and a historical perspective on the Hebrew language, both of which have served as the foundation for all of my scholarly research. Likewise, I thank Jo Ann, who taught me ancient Hebrew epigraphy and trained me in the scholarly study of the Hebrew Bible. I am also grateful to Na'ama Pat-El and Jonathan Kaplan for their instructive comments on the project. Finally, I thank Christopher Rollston, who offered so much pertinent advice on how to refine this study.

I thank Eisenbrauns-Penn State University Press for accepting the manuscript for publication. It has been wonderful to work with Jim Eisenbraun and the representatives at Eisenbrauns, all of whom have provided helpful guidance throughout the publication process. I also thank the two external reviewers of the initial manuscript, whose judicious remarks have strengthened the argumentation of this work. Additionally, my good friend Ben Kantor deserves my thanks for providing assistance regarding various aspects of this book.

Much of the revision process of the manuscript took place at the library of the Institute of Archaeology at the Hebrew University of Jerusalem during the summer of 2016. I am grateful to the Hebrew University for giving me the opportunity to use its resources to revise this project. Columbia University provided me with the funding to travel to Israel in 2016, for which I am thankful. I am also grateful to my home department at Princeton University, the Department of Near Eastern Studies, for supporting this book project. While I began revising the manuscript at the Hebrew University of Jerusalem, the final revisions took place in the Firestone Library of Princeton University and in the Princeton

Theological Seminary library. I am indebted to both institutions for providing me with the academic resources needed for the completion of this book. I am also very grateful to Todd Bolen at BiblePlaces.com, who very graciously provided many images included in this book.

Most of all, I thank my family. My siblings Elizabeth and her husband Alex, Mark, Iosif, and Anya were a continual source of strength while I worked on this book. Likewise, my mother Natalya has supported this work from start to finish, and she deserves my highest thanks for teaching my siblings and me how to persevere despite seemingly insurmountable difficulties. This book is dedicated to her.
