

Contributors

Robert H. Bates (Ph.D. MIT) is Luce Professor of Political Economy at Duke University. In addition to his doctoral work in political science he trained in social anthropology at the University of London and Manchester University. He has studied local politics in Zambia, and later turned his attention to problems of rural development in Africa in general, and more recently to Kenya in particular. His major works include, Unions, Parties, and Political Development: A Study of Mineworkers in Zambia 1971, Rural Responses to Industrialization: A Study of Village Zambia 1976, Agricultural Development in Africa 1980, States and Markets in Tropical Africa 1981, Essays on the Political Economy of Tropical Africa 1983, and Beyond the Miracle of the Market forthcoming.

Ronald Cohen (Ph.D. Wisconsin) is professor of anthropology, University of Florida, and Chair of the Carter Lectures at the Center for African Studies in the same university. He has worked in Nigeria and the Canadian arctic on problems of social change, state formation, and rural development. Major works are, The Kanuri of Borno 1967 (reissued 1987), Dominance and Defiance 1971, From Tribe to Nation (edited with John Middleton) 1971, Handbook of Method in Cultural Anthropology (edited with Raoul Narroll) 1971 (reissued 1973), Origins of the State (edited with E.R. Service) 1978, Hierarchy and Society (edited with G. Britan) 1981, and Legitimacy and State Formation (edited with J. Toland) 1988.

Christopher L. Delgado (Ph.D. Cornell) is the co-coordinator for Africa at the International Research Institute in Washington, D.C. and a part-time faculty member at The Johns Hopkins University School of Advanced International Studies. He has worked on economic problems of rural development in Africa and their effects on the development of agricultural policy and the implementation of policy for specific areas and for the continent as a whole. His published works include Livestock versus Foodgrain Production in Southeast Upper Volta: A Resource Allocation Analysis 1979, The Political Economy of Ivory Coast (coeditor) 1984, Accelerating Agricultural Growth in Sub-Saharan Africa (coeditor) 1987, and numerous articles.

Paul Goldsmith is a Ph.D. candidate in anthropology and african studies at the University of Florida. He has worked previously for ten years in Kenya with various non-governmental groups as a special instructor. He is presently carrying out doctoral research on the influence of agrarian capitalism on the development of marginal lands in Kenya.

Angelique Haugerud (Ph.D. Northwestern) is assistant professor of anthropology at Yale University. She has worked on macro and micro influences on rural household economy in Kenya, and later as a Rockefeller Post-Doctoral Fellow on agrarian change and economic strategies of farm households in Rwanda, Burundi, and Kenya. Her publications include "An Anthropologist in an African Research Institute: An Informal Essay," Development Anthropology Network 1986, "Land Tenure and Agrarian Change in Kenya," Africa 1988, and "Anthropology and Interdisciplinary Research," in Brokensha and Little (eds.) The Anthropology of Development and Change in Eastern Africa forthcoming.

Goran Hyden (Ph.D. Lund) is professor of political science at the University of Florida and senior member of the Center for African Studies. He has spent two decades living and working in East Africa on problems of development theory and practice with special emphasis on problems of rural transformation, administration, and governance, as these apply to Africa. His major works (in English) include Tanu Yajenja Nchi: Political Development in Rural Tanzania 1968, Development Administration: The Kenya Experience 1970, Efficiency versus Distribution in East African Cooperatives 1973, Developing Research on African Administration: Some Key Issues 1975, Beyond Ujaama: Underdevelopment and the Uncaptured Peasantry 1980, and No Shortcuts to Progress 1983.

Michael F. Lofchie (Ph.D. University of California, Berkeley) is professor of political science and director of the African Studies Center at the University of California, Los Angeles. In his early work he focused on the role of political parties in African development. More recently he has turned his attention to issues of food and hunger on the continent. His most important publications include Zanzibar: Background to Revolution 1965, Agricultural Development in Africa: Issues of Public Policy (edited with Robert H. Bates) 1980, and Africa's Agrarian Crises: The Roots of Famine (edited with Stephen Cummins and Rhys Payne) 1985.

Akinlawon L. Mabogunje (Ph.D. University of London, honorary doctorates, Stockholm, and Michigan State University) is a partner in the Ibadan-based (Nigeria) consultancy firm of PAI-Associates. He was faculty member and dean at Ibadan University for many years and has been president of the International Geographical Union, and member of the Board of The Population Council. Dr. Mabogunje is also the recipient of Nigeria's highest civilian honor, The National Merit Award, for his scholarly contribution on the rural and urban development problems of his country and Africa in general. His major works include Urbanisation in Nigeria 1968, Regional Planning and National Development in Africa (edited with A. Fani-ran) 1977, and The Development Process: A Spatial Perspective 1980.