
ACKNOWLEDGMENTS

Self-determination, interdependence, the role of communities and states, and the question of boundaries have always been at the center of international relations—not just since President Woodrow Wilson’s Fourteen Points. At the end of the Cold War, Prince Hans Adam II of Liechtenstein’s convictions about the importance of the rights of self-determination and democracy to peoples throughout the world led eventually to Liechtenstein’s UN Initiative on Self-Determination, as well as to the establishment of the Liechtenstein Research Program on Self-Determination at Princeton University. This book is the result of one of the research program’s core projects. Thus, I would like to express my gratitude to Prince Hans Adam for his support and vision.

The interest of colleagues and friends at Princeton and elsewhere made it possible for me to expand research activities and teaching related to self-determination and to organize the project and this volume. I would especially like to mention Michael Doyle, Richard Falk, Claudia Fritsche, James Gow, Jeffrey Herbst, Walter Hinderer, Atul Kohli, Jeremiah Ostriker, the late Edgar L. Rachlin, Albert Rohan, Michael Rothschild, Harold Shapiro, Dusan Sidjanski, James Trussell, Arthur Watts, William Weaver, and Thomas Wright. I also am very grateful for the devoted support and assistance of the staff of the research program: Melissa Magliana, and especially Tyler Felgenhauer, who provided outstanding editorial and research assistance, and Elizabeth Herron, whose efforts have been instrumental in keeping the program running.

Last but certainly not least, I would like to express to my beloved wife, Annegret, my deep gratitude for all her support in the ups and downs of such an undertaking, and to my daughters, Carolina and Mariella, my thanks for their understanding the travails of Daddy’s sometimes overbearing work.

May this volume influence and provide knowledge to all who must deal with issues of self-determination, and may it in some small ways help to avoid the bloodshed and destruction that have made so many recent self-determination crises so infamous.

—Wolfgang Danspeckgruber