

Acknowledgments

This volume draws on the efforts of an international working group that explored the contributions that international political economy (IPE) scholarship can bring to the analysis of transnational crime. For their insights and suggestions, I wish especially to thank the contributors to the volume as well as Peter Katzenstein, Simon Reich, Christopher May, Lynne Rienner, and two anonymous reviewers. The project also has benefited greatly from the support of the Helen Way Klinger College of Arts and Sciences, the Eliot Fitch Endowment, and the Center for Transnational Justice at Marquette University. Special thanks at Marquette go to Michael McKinney, Mary Dunnwald, Leah Manney, Alex McShiras, Alexandria Innes, and Julian Lee.

In portions of Chapters 1 and 4, I draw from and develop arguments discussed in “Crime in the Global Economy,” from Richard Stubbs and Geoffrey R. D. Underhill, eds., Political Economy and the Changing Global Order (Oxford University Press, 2006). Peter Andreas and Ethan Nadelmann in Chapter 2 draw from their book Policing the Globe: Criminalization and Crime Control in International Relations (2006, used here by permission of Oxford University Press).

Completion of the volume would not have been possible without time provided by sabbatical support from Marquette University and a research fellowship at the Woodrow Wilson International Center for Scholars. At Lynne Rienner Publishers, special thanks go to Karen Williams for shepherding the manuscript to publication. Finally, this volume is dedicated to my students at Marquette University for their assistance in expanding the parameters of IPE inquiry.
