
Acknowledgments

The idea of combining various analytic frameworks to study the growing interaction between the two sides of the Taiwan Straits had been brewing in our minds during the 1980s. A conference grant from the Chiang Ching-kuo Foundation for International Scholarly Exchange enabled us to realize this idea in a conference project, and then this volume.

We are most grateful to the Chiang Ching-kuo Foundation for its financial support; the Department of Political Science, College of Liberal Arts, and Institute for Pacific Asia at Texas A&M University for hosting this project and extending warm hospitality to conference participants; and both the Department of Political Science at the University of Kentucky and the Department of Government at the College of William and Mary for providing the most amicable and enjoyable ambience in which to complete the editing of this book. We express our gratitude to George Chen, Michael Ying-mao Kau, Chong-pin Lin, and Guoqing Zhang (from Beijing University) for their contributions to lively discussions at the conference. We also thank the contributors of this book for their patience in revising their chapters several times. We owe special thanks to John Fuh-sheng Hsieh and Qingguo Jia, who promptly and gracefully responded to our postconference recruitment. Finally, thanks are also due to Alexander Tan and Jian Liu (Texas A&M University) and Kun-Jung Liao and Todd Shields (University of Kentucky) for their most competent research and clerical assistance; and Alice Hsu and Kevin Landdeck (University of Michigan) for their editorial assistance.

The names of the editors of the volume are listed in alphabetical order.
