

Acknowledgments

This book is a meta-dream of sorts, wherein conversations about issues close to my scholar-activist heart are continued, and paths of inquiry about race, identity, inequality, and justice are illuminated and traversed. I am truly honored to have been able to engage with the stellar group of scholars in the book and eternally grateful that they were willing to share in this effort with me. It is with the deepest sincerity that I acknowledge their work—for without their ideas, their insights, their challenges, their openness, their timeliness, their critical lenses, and their willingness, this project would never have been possible.

Other scholars who were with us during the formation and implementation of the vision behind this book deserve thanks as well: Inna Altschul, Constance Backhouse, Adrian Blackledge, Marilynn Brewer, Philip Brown, James Cote, Kay Deaux, Nadine Dolby, Ian Christopher Fletcher, David Gilbert, Joshua Goldstein, Ellington Graves, Ronald Hall, Monica Hardesty, Janet Helms, Roger Herring, Dennis Howitt, Verna Keith, James O'Donnell, Daphna Oyserman, Alvin Poussaint, Wendy Roth, Jon Michael Spencer, William Swann, Ronald Taylor, Jewell Taylor-Gibbs, Cathy Thompson, Henry Trueba, Sarah White, and Howard Winant. These individuals' comments on early versions of the book led to significant reconceptualizations and rearticulations of the thematic material contained within these pages. Though some on this list may not know why they are included or in what way they contributed, they did—and their work made this a better book.

The staff at Lynne Rienner Publishers is fabulous, and their pursuit of cutting-edge scholarship is an important endeavor. I must first and foremost give a huge and serious thanks to Bridget Julian. I came to Bridget with a vision; she listened, read, and gave much thought to that vision and then came to the table with the most amazing ideas and challenges, delivered in the most amiable way; and through her well-honed editorial abilities and passion for the project, we pushed it further and clarified its core contentions. Bridget, thank you so much—and enjoy parenthood! Next, Lynne Rienner herself is a formidable and astounding publisher and editor. Going beyond the call of duty, Lynne spent time with me on the phone, in person, and through letters to continue to push this project forward—again, with passion and an understanding of the issues (and the audiences). Should I ever have the opportunity to work with Lynne again, I would welcome it. I would also like to thank Leanne Anderson, Lisa Tulchin, and Karen Williams at Lynne Rienner Publishers, as well as Beth Partin; their gracious and invaluable work is appreciated. The thorough and critical reviews from anonymous reviewers were top-notch and exceedingly helpful in moving through the final stages of this process—they made this book better. Thank you.

The process of developing the emerging contours of the book took place in several contexts, but most notably at annual meetings of the Association of Black Sociologists, the American Sociological Association, and the Southern Sociological Society. In addition, colleagues, staff, and students at both the University of Alabama in Huntsville and the University of Missouri at Columbia provided unstinting support for my work. Thank you to Dipa Basu, Cliff Beacham, Mitch Berbrier, Rebecca Brambach, Wayne Brekhuis, Rodney Coates, Kevin Cokley, Glenna Colclough, Anamaria Csizmadia, Manndi DeBoef, Melissa Dixon, Marlese Durr, Nancy Finley, Walda Katz Fishman, Tyrone Foreman, Debbie Friedrich, Stephanie Grimes, Jay Gubrium, Annie Harris, Paige Hendrix, Melissa Herman, Joan Hermesen, Cedric Herring, Jan Howard, Sue Kirkpatrick, Amy Lane, Jackie Litt, Alan McClare, Veronica Medina, Suzanne Nevells, Bob Newby, Yvonne Newsome, Mary Oakes, Arthur Paris, Tola Pearce, Desiree Robertson, Steve Rosenthal, Lori Rounsval, Bhavani Sitaraman, Rachel Sullivan, Amy Wilkins, Jeff Williams, and Tukufu Zuberi.

My family has been with me through this endeavor and, bless their hearts, they have had to deal with quite a lot. To my children, Karina, Thomas, and Henry, thank you so much for being understanding, in whatever ways you could (even listening to Mommy and Daddy talking about “Daddy’s book” stuff when you really wanted to talk about Lord of the Rings), of the time Daddy had to devote to this book—heck, Thomas, you even made a book of your own alongside mine. To the extended family who, over dinner, visits, holidays, and so on, were kind enough to both ask about and then listen to me talk about this exciting project—Mom and Dad, Grandpa and Grandma, Brian and Mark, Anthony and Lynn, Olly, Juju, Jenny, Colin, Simon, Becky, David, and Lisa (even Katherine Taylor in utero), and Katherine Enfinger—thanks! Finally, words cannot express my gratitude to my partner in crime, my best friend, my companion along this road, Rachel. Thank you so much! You have been so kind, understanding, and supportive, as well as conceptually, organizationally, and logistically helpful concerning this project. Actually, Rachel, you were this project’s “cheerleader,” and as always you provided me with the space to complete this book. You never cease to amaze me; I am in awe of and in love with you. Thank you for being you!
