

Acknowledgments

FIRST and foremost, gratitude is due to Stephen Banfield, who has been involved in this project throughout the various forms it has taken in the last seven years, from advising on my PhD proposal, through supervising the thesis (on Bridge's chamber music), to offering feedback on various drafts of the current text. His unfailing enthusiasm and erudition have been a constant help and inspiration. Guido Heldt, John Pickard and Paul Banks also provided invaluable feedback on the thesis at different stages.

Many others have read drafts of this book, or parts of it, and I am very grateful for their feedback, in particular Jane Angell, Andrew Brown, Jessica Chan, Gareth Cox, Benjamin Earle, Mark Fitzgerald, Paul Hopwood, Stephen Lloyd, Steven Martin, Michael Murphy, Christopher Redwood, Paul Rodmell, Ruth Stanley, and Simon McVeigh. Conversations with other Bridge scholars, most particularly Mark Amos and Paul Hindmarsh, have also been extremely stimulating and helpful.

Thanks are also due to Peter Horton at the Royal College of Music, whose help has been invaluable, and Nick Clark at the Britten-Pears Library.

The publication of this book has been assisted by grants from the Society for Musicology in Ireland and the Frank Bridge Bequest.