

ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS

Writing a book is a hard thing to do and I could not have done it without the help of very many people.

First of all, thank you everyone at Berghahn. You have been very patient and encouraging. I would also like to thank Don Kalb and the other editors on the Dislocations series. I am very lucky to count Patrick Neveling as my friend, thank you for nudging me in this direction.

Mike Kirkwood's suggestions on my manuscript were incredibly valuable, as were his views on everything else, including cricket.

Susan Watkins and Daniel Finn at the New Left Review, and Professor Ian Phimister at the University of the Free State had nothing to do with this book, but having such intellectually impressive people take me seriously and offer encouragement to my wider work helped my morale enormously.

I was lucky to study at University College London's department of Anthropology, I am still profoundly grateful for the opportunity they gave me. Professors Michael Rowlands and Daniel Miller there deserve especial thanks.

At SOAS, Professor Richard Fardon made very important intellectual suggestions about this work, but he has also given me a host of other kinds of help: attentive proofreader, application reviser, and sympathetic ear. I am amazed that a scholar who has produced so many highly regarded publications and with so many other responsibilities could find the time to do this.

At the University of Pretoria I was given much support and intellectual assistance. Professors Charles Van Onselen, John Sharpe, and Inocent Pikirayi, and Drs Detlev Krige, Fraser McNeill, Jason Sumich, Juliana Braz-Diaz and Mallika Shakya all contributed to an enjoyable, stimulating and productive two years in South Africa.

Others I would like in particular to thank for their help are:

Kalaho Mayombo, Eric Tshimpaka, Gloria Turkhadio, Celezino, Jhimmy, Professeur Kibens, Cellulaire, Mi, Smith, Kams, Balzac, Mandela Atala, Innocent, Yves, Eboa, Maika Munan, Sec Bidens, Theo Bidens, Polistar, Lassa, Tony and Jean Mark.

Professor Filip De Boeck met me in Brussels to discuss my then very unformed project and was very generous with his time. Professor Nancy Rose Hunt has also been incredibly kind, generous and helpful. My connection to both of these eminent scholars has been a source of encouragement and intellectual inspiration.

In Kinshasa, Marc who let me stay in his house when he was away, and everyone at the premier rue, especially Mimi and Diaz. Just down the road, John at studio Mek'o was very kind. Later on I got to know the wonderful Baby, Leon and Nanou Silikani, Diji, Pitshou Imbole, Armando, Nancy, Bijou, Elko, Jimmy (and family), Vieux Tout Kin, everyone at Londres bar and Kadafi spot, what a joy you all are and how I miss all of you.

At the start of my stay in Kinshasa I was very lucky to be invited to a conference organized by Professor Nancy Rose Hunt and Professor Sabakinu. The colleagues I met via this conference changed my work very dramatically. Thank you Nancy for inviting me. Kristien Geenen gave the best paper I have ever heard, illustrated with her wonderful photographs. She also showed me how to get around the city and her approach to everything made me into a far less timid kind of researcher than I would otherwise have been. I was honoured to present a paper at the conference with Leon Tsambu (now Professor). We became friends, Leon knows more than anyone about Congo music, and he is a brilliant theorist of cultural life. I would also like to thank Yolande, Leon's wife, for being so hospitable despite children and studies of her own to manage.

Via Leon I have got to know many people working at the University of Kinshasa. Among the senior staff Professor Mutamba and Professor Obotela were especially kind. The friendship and assistance of all the people who work at the University of Kinshasa's Centre D'Etudes Politiques has been especially valuable – Dede Watchiba, Willy Kalala, José Bazonzi, Jules Kassay, Célestin Tshimande, Delphin Kayembe and Professor Jean Omasombo. The centre produces a huge amount of exciting work on social and political questions in the Congo, and is one of the most exciting social science research centres that I have visited.

I was also very lucky to meet and make friends with Pitshou Mangbanga, and via him with Saint José Inaka. They shared their deep knowledge of their city in a way that combined an insider's grasp with a sociological and analytical turn of mind. I also had a lot of fun in their company.

Via Saint José I got to know the entire Inaka Family. All of them have helped me to understand and feel at home in Kinshasa. I would especially like to mention Pascal, Mama Marthe, Landry, Laroche, Clotilde, Marie-Therese, Marie-Fidel, Coco, Leticia and Rebecca.

Last but not least I would like to thank my father Stanley (now dead alas), my mother Barbara, my wife Antoinette and little Alexandra.
