

FIGURES AND TABLES

Figures

| | |
|---|-----|
| Figure 3.1. Daniela, “Salario alle casalinghe?” (Effè , no. 3 [1974]: np). | 150 |
| Figure 3.2. Daniela, “Salario alle casalinghe?” (Effè , no. 3 [1974]: np). | 151 |
| Figure 3.3. “Salario alle casalinghe?” (Effè , no. 3 [1974]: 21). | 152 |
| Figure 3.4. Collettivo Internazionale Femminista, Le operaie della casa (Venezia: Marsilio, 1974). Cover of the book. | 153 |
| Figure 5.1. Percentages of housewives and economically active women among women, Italy, 1861–2011. Sources: Italian population censuses, 1861–2011 (original census data). | 199 |
| Figure 5.2. Percentage of women in the Italian male and female active population, 1881–1961. Source: Ornello Vitali, Aspetti dello sviluppo economico italiano alla luce della ricostruzione della popolazione attiva (Roma: Failli, 1970). | 201 |
| Figure 5.3. Percentage of economically active women among women and percentage of domestic workers among economically active women, Italy, 1861–2001. Sources: Italian population censuses, 1861–2011 (original census data). | 205 |

Tables

| | |
|--|-----|
| Table 4.1. Categories and classification of (unpaid) domestic work in the national population censuses. Sources: Spanish national censuses. | 174 |
|--|-----|

| | |
|--|-----|
| Table 5.1. Classification of women whom we would define as “housewives” in the Italian population censuses. Sources: Italian population censuses, 1861–2011. | 194 |
| Table 6.1. All work activities grouped according to category and gender, Sweden 1550–1799 (absolute numbers). Source: Maria Ågren ed., Making a Living, Making a Difference: Gender and Work in Early Modern European Society (Oxford: Oxford University Press, 2017), 30. | 230 |