

Acknowledgements

Throughout this project I have received assistance and encouragement from many people and it is a great pleasure to express my appreciation for them here. I thank the Arts and Humanities Research Council (www.ahrc.ac.uk) for providing me with a three-year Doctoral Award. I am especially indebted to Jonathan Phillips for first introducing me to the Crusades, for his invaluable insight, guidance, and support both as my PhD supervisor and later in my postdoctoral research and teaching, and for reading this manuscript so often in its various stages. I offer my sincere thanks to Jonathan Harris and Peregrine Horden for providing constructive advice and encouragement throughout the project, and especially for reading and commenting on the manuscript in full during its preparation. I am grateful to Bruce Brasington for his generosity in providing such cogent and useful comments on canon law. I am indebted to Hannes Kleineke, Marian Ciuca, and Martin Hall for their advice on translating various Latin texts.

I am fortunate to have received help from numerous scholars at various stages of the project; while I cannot thank them all here I am especially grateful for the kindness and assistance of Thomas Asbridge, Barbara Bombi, Marcus Bull, Lindy Grant, Bernard Hamilton, Norman Housley, Alan V. Murray, Thomas Madden, William Purkis, Rebecca Rist, and Jochen Schenk. It is a pleasure to acknowledge my undergraduate and postgraduate students at Royal Holloway University of London, the University of Reading, the University of Sheffield and the University of Leicester for discussing many of the ideas and themes that appear here. The librarians at the University of Reading, the University of Sheffield, University of Leicester, the University of Oxford, and the University of London were especially welcoming and helpful throughout the project but particular thanks are due to Luisa Hodgkinson and the Inter Library Loan department at Royal Holloway for tracking down the more obscure texts. I am extremely grateful to Caroline Palmer and Robert Kinsey at Boydell & Brewer for their patience and support during the preparation of the book for publication. I thank the Bibliothèque royale de Belgique for permission to use the Peterborough Psalter on the dust jacket; the image of women defending the castle of love through arms encompasses many of the themes of this book.

My family, and most especially my parents and sister, have been an unfailing source of moral support from the book's earliest origins to its final stages, even when events of the twelfth and thirteenth centuries took precedence over the present day. My greatest debt is to my parents; it is no exaggeration to say that the book could not have been written without their constant enthusiasm, encouragement, and assistance and I dedicate this book to them with love and in gratitude.