

ACKNOWLEDGMENTS

This volume results from a collaboration between researchers based at the Max Planck Institute for Social Anthropology (MPI), Halle/Saale, Germany, and the Institute of Social Sciences, University of Lisbon (ICS-UL), Portugal, in the context of the joint project “Colonialism and Mimetic Processes in Historical and Anthropological Perspectives” funded by the German Academic Exchange Service (DAAD) and the Portuguese Acções Integradas Luso-Alemãs (FUP/CRUP) (project reference A-07/2011). It is also a product of the research project entitled “Colonial Mimesis in Lusophone Asia and Africa” funded by the Foundation for Science and Technology (FCT), Portugal (reference PTDC/CS-ANT/101064/2008) and based at the Institute of Social Sciences, University of Lisbon. Between 2010 and 2013, the group members held several workshops and conference panels on the topic, in which the theories and historical data for this publication were extensively discussed. We are especially grateful to all workshop participants at Halle and Lisbon for important comments and stimulating debates, and to Carmo Daun e Lorena for exchanges at an initial stage of this project.

We also want to acknowledge the help of numerous friends, administrative staff, and people who gave us access to private and public archives and their expertise in many of the historical and ethnographic field sites where we work in Europe, Africa, and Southeast Asia.

We also received valuable and generous critical feedback from the anonymous reviewers for the special issue of Berghahn’s journal Social Analysis, in which most of the pieces presented here were first published in 2018. Early Portuguese-language versions of the chapters by Cristiana Bastos, Ricardo Roque, and Tiago Saraiva first appeared in a special issue on colonial mimesis in the Portuguese empire published in the journal Etnográfica in 2014. We thank Etnográfica for permission to reuse these materials here. Tiago Saraiva’s chapter and Patrice Ladwig’s final essay were not originally included in the special issue of Social Analysis. During the past year, it was a great pleasure to work with Amanda Horn and Sulaiman Ahmad at Berghahn.

Patrice Ladwig and Ricardo Roque