

ACKNOWLEDGMENTS

Many sincere thanks are due to numerous colleagues, friends, former students, and family members, whose inspiration and encouragement has been vital to the completion of this project. First and foremost, I owe an enormous debt of gratitude to each of the seventeen chapter contributors who in the spring of 2017 accepted my invitation to contribute original pieces to an edited volume, a project that had neither funding nor even a publisher at that point. I am particularly grateful to ten extraordinary scholars affiliated with leading Nordic universities—namely, Juhana Aunesluoma, Sofie Lene Bak, Guðmundur Hálfðanarson, Christine Hamm, Erik Hedling, Gunnar Iversen, Tom Kristiansen, Daisy Neijmann, Julia Pujanen and John Sundholm—because they gladly agreed to contribute to this collaborative study and complied readily with numerous editorial requests and deadlines, although we had never met in person—and most of us have yet to meet.

I also offer heartfelt gratitude to six North American colleagues, among them former graduate students, who enthusiastically contributed to the book, including Amanda Doxtater, Dean Krouk, Mark Mussari, Jan Krogh Nielsen, Liina-Ly Roos, and Pétur Valsson. Finally, I offer special thanks to John Gilmour at the University of Edinburgh, not only for his chapter contribution but also for his initial encouragement and suggestion to pursue Berghahn Books as the publisher.

Furthermore, I thank many colleagues and friends who offered suggestions and help along the way, especially Tiina Nunnally for invaluable professional advice and encouragement; Kristian Næsby, lecturer of Danish at the University of Washington, for film recommendations; Marianne Wrenfeldt Asmusen for critical feedback on my chapter on Isak Dinesen; Mark Mussari for his suggestion of the cover image; and Liesl Yamaguchi for her assistance in locating a scholar of adaptations of Linna's work. Not least I would also like to thank Meta, Kristian, and Gitte Brorsen, Jan and Karen Krogh Nielsen, Marianne Stølen, Marie Tetzlaff, Anett Wæber, and the Tranberg family for gracious hospitality in Denmark.

I must also express heartfelt gratitude to an entire generation of undergraduate and graduate students at the University of Washington who have contributed to this intellectual inquiry by means of inspired class presentations, countless outstanding term papers, and numerous exceptional senior essays as well as graduate seminar papers. Their engagement with various facets of the subject matter has added invaluable intellectual momentum to this book project.

Finally, but not least, I wish to thank my remarkable colleagues at the University of Washington, especially departmental chair Professor Andrew Nestingen and the divisional dean's office for the humanities for granting me research sabbatical in the winter and spring quarters of 2017; without professional leave from my regular teaching and administrative duties in the Department of Scandinavian Studies, this book would not have come to fruition. A special thanks also to Dan Mandeville of the University of Washington libraries whose prompt and helpful assistance never fails. My gratitude also extends to Georg and Nina Pedersen for their enormous generosity and foresight; the establishment of the Georg and Nina Pedersen Endowed Faculty Fund for Danish Studies will help support projects such as this one in the future.

I am also thankful to my close family members for cheering me on from the sidelines: especially Kirsten and Michael, and my sons, Andreas, Leif, and Viggo. Above all, I especially want to express my love and deepest gratitude to my mother Inger for her optimistic outlook, strong spirit, and cultivation of family, education, history, and communicative memories.

Finally, I wish to thank senior editor Chris Chappell, editorial assistant Mykelin Higham, and Lizzie Martinez at Berghahn Books for their patient guidance, professional assistance, and editorial advice. Again, I wholeheartedly thank the chapter contributors as well as Berghahn Books' editorial staff for their diligence and collegiality throughout the editorial and publication process.
