

Acknowledgements

Like many of the women explored throughout the following chapters, I am lucky to count York as my home, while the Department of History at the University of York has provided an intellectual home in which this book was conceived, researched, and written. I therefore owe my sincere thanks to colleagues who have provided feedback, support, and encouragement over the years, including Helen Cowie, Geoff Cubitt, Simon Ditchfield, Hannah Greig, Sarah Hall, Victoria Hoyle, Hannah Jeans, Mark Jenner, Catriona Kennedy, Emilie Murphy, Laura Stewart, and Chloe Wigston Smith. Natasha Glaisyer has proved a steadfast mentor and friend, coaching me through three degrees and an emerging academic career with an endless supply of patience, kindness, and good humour. I am more grateful than I can say for her continued support. Conversations with my brilliant undergraduate and postgraduate students about eighteenth-century clothing have also sustained and reinvigorated me, and I thank them for their insights.

I have also benefitted from the support of and conversations with colleagues beyond York, and my thanks go to Jennifer Aston, Hannah Barker, Helen Berry, Serena Dyer, Ariane Fennetaux, Karen Harvey, Matthew McCormack, Kate Smith, Siobhan Talbott, and Michael Walkden. I am grateful to Peter Collinge, Alannah Tomkins, and The Poor Law: Small Bills and Petty Finance 1700 to 1834 project team, particularly the volunteers who tirelessly transcribed the overseers' vouchers explored in Chapter 3 of this book. Elizabeth Bobbitt and Anna Mercer have provided a source of support, friendship, and fun in the years since we were all PhD students together.

This research would not have been possible without financial support from the White Rose College of Arts and Humanities, and my thanks also go to the staff at the Borthwick Institute for Archives, Dorset History Centre, East Riding Archives and Local Studies, University of Nottingham Manuscripts and Special Collections, University of Durham Special Collections, Tyne and Wear Archives, the West Yorkshire Archive Service in Halifax and Bradford, and the York Explore Library and Archive for their time and expertise. I am extremely grateful to the Governors of the Pasold Fund for supporting this book, and to Stana Nenadic in particular, whose guidance and support has been invaluable.

My thanks also go to Michael Middeke and Crispin Peet at Boydell & Brewer, as well as the anonymous readers whose comments and feedback strengthened this book. All errors are my own.

At the time of publication, the copyright holder(s) for figures 7 and 8 could not be identified. If you are aware of the identity of the copyright holder(s) please contact us. No infringement is intended.

Now for three of my biggest debts: first, to Jonjo, who has lived with this book as long as I have. He has my heartfelt love and gratitude for this. And finally, to my parents, whose love of the past has always inspired me – who would have guessed that the nine-year-old charging around a field in Georgian clothing would one day write a book about it? They have supported me in every way possible, and this book is for them.