

Preface and Acknowledgments

I began this project after many years of studying women Zionists in the United States, something that whet my curiosity about the activities of Zionist women in other countries worldwide. Aware of the lacuna in Zionist historiography in this field as the study of this topic was only in its inception, I initially aspired to write a scholarly volume about women Zionists worldwide. Alas, a historian's desires are not always mirrored by reality, and it soon became clear that such a book cannot be written by a single author. The next stage was to create a team of experienced scholars who understood the various languages and were familiar with the diverse cultures of the many Jewish communities involved. What is set before you is the outcome of many years of hard work of putting a volume that paints a panoramic picture of women's Zionist activism from the inception of Zionism in the late nineteenth century, up to the founding of the State of Israel where this volume ends.

The preparation of a book is always the work of many people, certainly a collection of articles by nine authors. It is my duty and pleasure to thank all those who helped in the long and complex path that led to the final outcome. I hope that I have included everyone who has assisted me during the process of preparing this collection and beg forgiveness of anyone whom I have inadvertently omitted.

It is a great pleasure for me to thank my cousin and dear friend Priv. Doz. Mag. PhD Eleonore Lappin-Epple for her substantial help in suggesting ideas, finding writers, and reading and commenting on some chapters written during the initial stage of working on the book.

I also wish to thank my dear friend Prof. Judy Tydor Baumel Schwartz for her unwavering support and assistance in answering my never-ending questions, historical and others and her constant encouragement.

It is with heartfelt gratitude mixed with great grief that I remember and thank my late, excellent assistant Omer Gealdor, who was of great help to me throughout the project. Omer did not get to enjoy the finished product of our joint labor, as he fell in battle near the northern border of Israel in 2024, protecting our beloved country. May his memory be a blessing.

I would like to express my gratitude to the many scholars who helped me shape this book: Prof. Orit Bashkin, Dr. Margalit Bejarano, Dr. Michal Ben-Ya'akov, Dr. Noga Efrati, Prof. Ariel Feldstein, Prof. Allon Gal, Prof. Yossi Goldstein (Ariel University, who patiently answered my questions about Russian Jewry), Dr. Yossi Goldstein (The Melton Center for Jewish Education, The Hebrew University of Jerusalem), Prof. Aviva Halamish, Prof. Marion Kaplan, Prof. Rachel Manekin, Prof. Guy Miron, Prof. Mark A. Raider, Prof. Shulamit Reinharz, Prof. Jonathan D. Sarna, Prof. Margalit Shilo (who devoted her precious time to our long conversations), Prof. Gideon Shimoni, and Prof. Eli Tzur. All made really valuable suggestions that helped shape this volume.

My special thanks to the Open University of Israel's Research Fund for supporting my own chapters: chapter 7 (grant number 43065); chapter 9 (grant number 43065); chapter 10 (grants numbers and 43056 and 43058), their initial editing and the unification of the book's text (grant number 41297). Thanks also to the Hadassah-Brandeis Institute (HBI) for their Research Award.

Archivist Susan Woodland provided continuous help in my research on Hadassah and the Mizrachi Women's Organization of America at the Center of Jewish History in New York. The Central Zionist Archives in Jerusalem supplied the archival material for the WIZO chapter, and many other archives worldwide provided sources for other chapters. My deepest thanks to all, along with the Open University of Israel library staff, and especially Ruth Baramkin.

Special thanks to Berghahn Books, and to Mark Stanton, the Books Editorial Director. It has been a great pleasure to work with him in preparing this volume for publication. Special thanks to Emma Wallace, Caroline Kuhtz and Carol Hulme for their wonderful work and for their assistance, making my work with them so pleasant.

Heartfelt thanks to my very dear English editor Alifa Saadya who gave me, an author who was not writing in her mother tongue, enormous help in improving the texts I wrote, as well as in unifying the entire text and its revisions before submitting it to the publisher as well as during the production process. It is a privilege to thank her for her support of, and endless patience with, both the texts and myself.

I also thank Sharon Blass for her translations of some of the chapters, and the initial editing of one of them.

Deep thanks to my wonderful sisters Malli and Yaeli, who have always been a source of advice, understanding, and comfort.

One person stands above all others when I give thanks. My beloved husband Rami, who gave me enormous assistance and encouragement not only during the years this complex project demanded, but throughout our life together. My love and thanks go beyond description. He is my ballast in life, and without him I could not have done what I did. I hope that this book is a small compensation for the many hours that I spent in front of the computer instead of being with him. It is to him and to my wonderful children and their spouses, Carmit and Amit, Matan and Rachel, Assaf and Tali, and Roni and Erez, and my grandchildren Uri, Noam, Ayala, Liad, and Ofri, that I dedicate what I consider as my best contribution to Zionist and Jewish historiography.
