

Acknowledgements

The ideas that led to this volume, and the broader suite of research projects of which it is a part, were first conceived in late 2018, culminating in a workshop we co-organized in Australia. That initial workshop, entitled ‘Heritage in West Asia: Stability or Conflict’ (January 2019), was held at Deakin University, Melbourne, and provided the initial forum for discussion. It was in the wake of these exchanges that we coined the term ‘border-straddling heritage’, reflecting our emerging conceptual focus.

Contributors to this collection presented their early drafts to the ‘Border-Straddling Heritage Virtual Workshop’ (April 2023), dedicated to the development of each individual chapter. Our extended introduction was further developed and presented at venues in Ljubljana (November 2023) and Newcastle upon Tyne (May 2024).

The manuscript was submitted in September 2024, and we received the reviewers’ feedback in January 2025. As we write these lines, we anticipate the volume’s production and release, likely in late 2025.

We would like to thank all participants in these events for their patience, valuable contributions and the lively discussions that helped shape this final volume.

We would also like to thank Deakin University’s Alfred Deakin Institute for Citizenship and Globalisation for their support of the 2019 workshop, and the School of Culture and Society at Aarhus for supporting a podcast series related to this book project.

We also acknowledge the support of the Korean National Commission for UNESCO’s (United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization) International Joint Research Grants on Transnational Heritage, which funded ‘The Heritage-Border Complexes and the Future of Eurasia’ pilot project (2024), enabling the final work on this volume’s submission.

The authors take full responsibility for any mistakes or misunderstandings in the text.

