This volume has been a collaborative effort between numerous people in multiple locations around the world. Although some of us have not even had the opportunity to meet personally, and in spite of the geographical distance that separates us, communication between all the contributors, the editors and the publisher was made possible by our shared interest in studying the development and contemporary conditions of informal settlements in Latin America. The process has been long and eventful. Hence we first want to thank each of the authors who kindly contributed their essays because the project would have never materialised without their support and extraordinary patience. We are also indebted to Marion Berghahn of Berghahn Books and Jo Labanyi, editor of the Remapping Cultural History series, for supporting the project since the beginning and for not losing hope despite the many deadlines that we missed. We are also grateful to Lea Allen for injecting a full breath of fresh air that allowed the completion of the volume when editing had fallen out of our hands. Finally, we would like to thank numerous other people who were involved indirectly in the process of producing the final manuscript, particularly Angela Uribe de Kellett for her translations and the technical staff at the School of Architecture of the University of Liverpool whose help proved to be vital at various stages and when the computers refused to work.
