

Preface

Plautus, the famous Roman comedist, once said that no-one on his own is ever wise enough. And I think he was right. If it had not been for all the help -linguistic and non-linguistic- I have been offered during my years spent in the Graduiertenkolleg - this dissertation would never have been finished, let alone come into being. Now, that I have succeeded in bringing this study to an end, I wish to express my gratitude to all who supported me at various stages:

to all professors from the Graduiertenkolleg for teaching me linguistics, and especially to Prof. Bierwisch, Prof. Fanselow, Prof. Donhauser, Dr. Wilder, Prof. Lang, Prof. Staudacher, and to Prof. Kosta for stimulating discussions, to all students from the Graduiertenkolleg for a wonderful time spent together and for being friends, to Dr. Chris Wilder for supervising this dissertation from the very beginning, for giving me helpful comments, for reading and commenting every page I ever gave him, for making 'my English' sound 'more English', for his constant encouragement, and every other kind of help and support he has ever offered me, to Prof. Karin Donhauser for long discussions in the evenings, for making me believe that I will finish my dissertation some day, for teaching me patience 'at times of crisis', for helping me to overcome my despair at various stages of this enterprise, to Eva Schlachter for all her warmth and kindness, for her endless patience with me at times when I was without any hope left, to Susann Fischer for always having time for me, for offering me help and support, for being able to solve every imaginable (and unimaginable) problem, to Marzena Rochoń, Małgosia Ćavar, Diana Pili, Michaela Schmitz for believing in me and being my friends, to Dorothee Kaesler for coming every weekend to the 'Schützenstrasse' and for keeping me company in the otherwise empty institute, to my room-mate Damir Čavar for never stopping asking me: “No co, juž oddaš?”, to my friend Sibyl Grohmann for listening to my complaints, to all my friends and colleagues -too many to mention them all- for emotional support, for their confidence in my work and constant encouragement, and finally and most importantly to my parents, my sister and brother for all their love.
