

Contents

I	Introduction	3
1.	Historical background	3
1.1.	Ogam (400-600)	4
1.2.	Old Irish (600-900)	5
1.3.	Middle Irish (900-1200)	6
1.4.	Classical Modern Irish (1200-1600)	7
1.5.	Early Modern Irish (1600-1900)	8
1.6.	Modern Irish (1900-)	9
1.6.1.	Irish in the twentieth-first century	11
2.	Dialects of Irish today	12
2.1.	Research on Irish dialects	14
2.2.	Linguistic research on Irish	16
2.2.1.	Individual dialect monographs	17
2.2.2.	Research on Irish phonology	19
2.3.	Main phonetic differences between dialects	20
2.4.	Data for former dialect areas	29
2.5.	Written documentation of Irish dialects	30
II	The phonological framework	39
1.	Sound inventory	39
1.1.	The palatal / non-palatal distinction	41
1.1.1.	Primary and secondary palatals	42
1.1.2.	How phonological contrasts are realised	43
1.1.3.	How contrasts are realised: polarity and polarity reversal	44
1.2.	Palatality and palatalisation	48
1.3.	Status of the feature [palatal]	50
1.4.	Independent and dependent segments	51
1.5.	Pairwise notation	53
1.6.	Lexical sets for Modern Irish	56
1.7.	The consonant system	61
1.7.1.	Stops	64
1.7.2.	Fricatives	71
1.7.3.	Shifts in articulation	85
1.8.	The sonorant system	88
1.8.1.	Nasals	90

1.8.2.	Laterals	92
1.8.3.	R -sounds	93
1.8.4.	Three-way distinctions among sonorants	97
1.8.5.	Polarised and non-polarised sonorants	99
1.8.6.	Historical development	103
1.8.7.	The position of the orthography	109
1.8.8.	Possible phonological analyses	110
1.8.9.	Abstract phonological derivations	112
1.8.10.	Lexical tagging	116
1.8.11.	Vowel tagging and assimilation	117
1.8.12.	Parallels in other languages	119
1.9.	The vowel system	121
1.9.1.	Long vowels	125
1.9.2.	Relative status of vowels	127
1.9.3.	Weighting of consonants and vowels	128
1.9.4.	Vowel gradation	129
1.9.5.	Short vowels	139
1.9.6.	Unstressed vowels	152
1.9.7.	Diphthongs	156
1.9.8.	Glides	163
1.9.9.	Historical developments	165
2.	Phonotactics	177
2.1.	Permissible clusters	178
2.2.	Cluster simplification	184
2.3.	Sonorant shift	185
2.4.	Interpretation of [h]	185
2.5.	Vowel phonotactics	186
2.6.	Prefixed consonants	187
2.7.	Minor processes	189
2.7.1.	Internal lenition and voicing	189
2.7.2.	Final devoicing	190
2.7.3.	Assibilation of glottal fricatives	191
2.7.4.	Depalatalisation of /r ^j /	191
2.7.5.	Assimilation across word boundaries	192
2.7.6.	F in Irish	192
2.7.7.	Elision phenomena	194
2.7.8.	Articulatory shifts	196
2.8.	Epenthesis	197
2.8.1.	Motivation for epenthesis	200
2.8.2.	Epenthesis and syncope	203

2.8.3.	Epenthesis and areality	203
2.8.4.	Epenthesis in Southern Irish	204
2.8.5.	Epenthesis and other processes	205
2.8.6.	Consonant epenthesis	206
2.9.	Metathesis	207
2.9.1.	Delimiting metathesis	209
2.9.2.	Metathesis and other processes	209
2.9.3.	The domain of metathesis	210
2.9.4.	Possible motivation for metathesis	210
2.9.5.	Metathesis and syllable structure	211
2.9.6.	Metathesis across syllable boundaries	212
2.9.7.	More on syllable structure	214
2.9.8.	Double, split-level and distant metathesis	217
2.9.9.	Metathesis and grammatical information	219
2.9.10.	Metathesis with loanwords	220
2.9.11.	Exceptions to metathesis	222
2.9.12.	Base form and metathesis	223
2.9.13.	Phonological processes and metathesis	223
3.	Stress in Irish	227
3.1.	Word stress in Southern Irish	230

III The morphonology of Irish 237

1.	Origins and development of initial mutation	237
1.1.	Divisions within Celtic	237
1.1.1.	P-Celtic and Q-Celtic	239
1.1.2.	Gaulish	240
1.2.	Primitive Irish: Ogam	241
1.2.1.	Glides and labial obstruents	242
1.3.	Mutations in Old Irish	243
1.4.	Evidence for lenition in Celtic	244
1.4.1.	Lenition in loanwords	246
1.5.	The origin of mutation in Celtic	248
1.5.1.	Relative chronology of mutation	249
1.5.2.	A case in point: the third person possessive pronouns	252
1.6.	A minimal system of mutation	255
1.6.1.	Regularity and scope of mutation	257
1.6.2.	Disruption of the system	257
1.6.3.	Overlap and zero in mutation	258
1.7.	Effectiveness of mutation systems	259

1.7.1.	Analogical spread and regularity	261
1.7.2.	Lenition of sonorants	263
1.7.3.	Realignment of oppositions	264
1.7.4.	Tenseness, gemination and lenition	268
1.8.	Extensions after functionalisation	270
1.8.1.	Redundancy with mutation	273
1.8.2.	Analytical trends in Irish	274
2.	Initial mutation in Modern Irish	277
2.2.	Prefixation of consonants	278
2.2.1.	Prefix H	278
2.2.2.	Prefix T	278
2.2.3.	Prefix D	280
2.3.	Analysis of the mutations	280
2.3.1.	Nasalisation	281
2.3.2.	Lenition	282
3.	Organisation and principles	285
3.1.	Base and root	286
3.2.	Type of alteration	286
3.3.	Base margin alteration	287
3.4.	Root extension and remnants of older patterns	288
3.5.	Scope of base margin alteration	289
3.6.	Anomalies in the mutation system	290
3.7.	Canonical word form	291
4.	Origins and development of palatalisation	293
4.1.	Spread of palatalisation	294
4.2.	Contrast in lexical words	295
4.3.	Palatalisation and morphonology	298
4.4.	Palatalisation in syllable rhymes	299
5.	Palatalisation in Russian and Irish	301
5.1.	Palatalisation: origin, extent and function	303
5.2.	Palatalisation as a cover feature	305
5.3.	The position of /j/	306
5.4.	Segment inventories	306
5.4.1.	The palatalisation of labials	308
5.4.2.	The palatalisation of velars	309
5.4.3.	The interpretation of [i] and [ɨ]	310
5.4.4.	Coronal consonants	311
5.4.5.	Coronal sonorants	313
5.4.6.	Labialisation of vowels	315
5.4,7.	Inflection in Irish and Russian	315

IV	Typological viewpoints	319
1.	Introduction	319
2.	Scottish Gaelic	319
3.	Welsh	321
3.1.1.	Nasalisation	323
3.1.2.	Feature interpretation of mutation	324
3.1.3.	The two leniting mutations of Welsh	326
3.1.4.	Major and minor lenition	328
3.1.5.	Genesis of mutation	329
4.	Breton	332
5.	Italian	335
6.	Spanish	337
6.1.	Andalusian Spanish	338
6.2.	Canary Spanish	338
6.3.	Castilian Spanish	339
7.	Danish	340
8.	Baltic Finnic	342
8.1.	Finnish	342
8.2.	Estonian	345
9.	Nivkh	346
10.	Fula	353
11.	Southern Paiute	361
12.	Central Vanuatu languages	363
13.	Conclusion	365
13.1.	Types of mutation	366
13.2.	Weak and strong mutation	367
13.2.1.	Exponence of weak mutation	368
13.2.2.	Exponence of strong mutation	368
13.2.3.	Two step and mixed mutation	369
13.3.	Diachronic developments	369
V	Appendixes	371
1.	The history of Irish	373
1.1.	Studies of Irish	375
1.2.	The bardic tracts	375
1.3.	Early grammars of Irish	376
1.4.	Bibliographical information on Irish	377
2.	The sound system of Modern Irish	378
2.1.	The consonant inventory	378

2.2.	The vowel inventory	379
3.	Lexical sets for Irish	381
4.	The transcription of Irish	384
5.	Scottish Gaelic	389
5.1.	Linguistic features	391
Glossary		395
References		407
Subject index		462
Language index		470
Name index		474