

Contents

Acknowledgements — VII

1 Introduction — 1

- 1.1 Thesis — 1
- 1.2 Overview of Chapters — 12
- 1.3 Previous Research — 18

2 Theory of the Sublime — 29

- 2.1 Longinus — 32
 - 2.1.1 “The echo of a great soul” — 33
 - 2.1.2 Sappho and the Threatened Subject — 34
 - 2.1.3 The Turn of the Sublime — 36
- 2.2 Edmund Burke — 38
 - 2.2.1 Towards an Aesthetic of Shocks: Burke — 38
 - 2.2.2 The Beautiful and the Sublime — 41
- 2.3 Immanuel Kant — 44
 - 2.3.1 Characteristics of the Aesthetic Feeling — 46
 - 2.3.2 The Beautiful and the Sublime — 47
- 2.4 Jean-François Lyotard — 53
 - 2.4.1 Lyotard and Kantian Reflective Aesthetic Judgement — 53
 - 2.4.2 Adjusting Kantian Sublime to the Postmodern Context — 54
 - 2.4.3 Realism — 56
 - 2.4.4 The Inhuman — 61
 - 2.4.5 The Threat of Privation — 64
 - 2.4.6 The Ungraspable Presence — 66
- 2.5 Summary — 67
- 2.6 Theorizing the Sublime for Drama Analysis — 71

3 Case Studies — 77

- 3.1 Patrick Marber’s Closer — 77
 - 3.1.1 The Beautiful, the Agreeable and the Sublime — 78
 - 3.1.2 Synopsis — 81
 - 3.1.3 Internal Analysis: Moments of (In)Hospitality — 82
 - 3.1.4 External Analysis: Moments of the (Un)Familiar — 106
- 3.2 Anthony Neilson’s Normal — 116
 - 3.2.1 Synopsis — 116
 - 3.2.2 Bataille, Eros and Thanatos, and the Evil Inside — 118

3.2.3	Internal Analysis: Wehner's Sublime Encounter with Eros and Thanatos —	122
3.2.4	The External Level: Ecstasy of Minds —	145
3.3	Mark Ravenhill's Faust Is Dead —	153
3.3.1	Synopsis —	154
3.3.2	Seduction in Realism and in Sublime —	156
3.3.3	Internal Analysis: Consumerist Seduction of the Characters —	160
3.3.4	External Analysis: Sublime Seduction of the Audience —	195
3.4	Sarah Kane's 4.48 Psychosis —	205
3.4.1	The Impossible Synopsis —	207
3.4.2	Internal Analysis: Singing on the Boundary —	213
3.4.3	External Analysis: the Influence of the Parergonal Language on the Audience —	246
4	Conclusion —	251
5	Works Cited —	261