

Acknowledgements

I would like to express my sincere appreciation to the Department of Asian Languages and Literature, University of Washington, Seattle, for their long-term support, especially to Professors Anne Yue-Hashimoto, David Knechtges and Zev Handel, and to the late Professor Jerry Norman. I owe a special debt of gratitude to Professor Michael Friedrich of the University of Hamburg and Director of the Center for the Study of Manuscript Cultures for his many critical comments on drafts of this book and for his constant support of my work generally. I am also grateful to Professor Matthias Richter at the University of Colorado, Boulder, for his many useful suggestions and critical comments, and to my senior colleagues in the field of Chinese historical linguistics, Professors Wolfgang Behr at the University of Zurich, William H. Baxter at the University of Michigan, Ann Arbor, and Laurent Sagart at the Center de Recherches Linguistiques sur l'Asie Orientale, EHESS, Paris for their encouragement and kind support throughout my graduate and post-doctoral career. I am greatly indebted to my teacher Professor William G. Boltz who supported and guided me with his vast knowledge and keen insight through the planning and completion of this book. I am thankful to Deng Lin from Seattle and Thies Staack from Hamburg, who were always there as good friends and knowledgeable colleagues.
