

Contents

Acknowledgements — IX

General Introduction

- 1 The intertextual relations between Ovid's Metamorphoses and Latin elegy: a critical assessment — 3
- 2 Methodological considerations — 9
- 3 Power relations in elegy and “the elegiac” in Ovid's Metamorphoses — 12
 - 3.1 Section I: analysis of elegiac discourse — 14
 - 3.1.1 Ideological context: the problem of power relations — 14
 - 3.1.2 Elegy as fallax opus: the “elegiac estrangement”. — 16
 - 3.1.2.1 Critical landscape and methodological considerations — 16
 - 3.1.2.2 Elegy: agonistic poetry — 22
 - 3.2 Section II: “the elegiac” in the Metamorphoses: meta-poetry and power relations — 24

Section I. Et amando et amare fatendo: Fiction and supra-fiction in Latin love elegy. Agon and power relations as poetological expressions

- 1 Introduction — 37
- 2 Insidias legi, magne poeta, tuas: the puella de-codes the text — 43
 - Propertius 2,13 — 48
 - Propertius 1,8 and 3,23 — 52
 - Propertius 2,26 — 54
 - Propertius 2,34 — 58
 - Propertius 1,1 — 60
 - Ars Amatoria* 1,455–458 and Heroides 20 and 21 — 62
 - Propertius 2,11 and 3,2 — 66

3 Te mihi materiem felicem in carmina praebe:
the puella as subject matter — 72

Catullus 68b — 75

Tibullus 1,4 — 91

Propertius 1,15 — 101

Propertius 2,3 — 106

Propertius 2,32 — 109

Propertius 2,28 — 110

Propertius 2,1 — 112

Ovid, Amores 1,1 — 116

Ovid, Amores 1,3 — 118

Ovid, Amores 1,10 — 121

Ovid, Amores 2,17 — 121

4 “The body-text”: the puella as literary work — 125

Ovid, Amores 3,9 — 125

Propertius 2,24a — 127

Propertius 2,25 and 2,34 — 128

Propertius 1,18 — 129

Propertius 2,5 — 132

Propertius 2,30b — 135

Propertius 1,2 — 137

Ovid, Amores 1,5 and 3,12 — 143

Section II. New perspectives in the study of “the elegiac” in Ovid’s *Metamorphoses

1 Introduction — 149

2 Asymmetrical love in the Metamorphoses — 151

Daphne and Apollo — 153

Io and Jupiter — 175

Callisto and Jupiter — 187

Herse and Mercury — 192

Philomela and Tereus — 205

Byblis and Caunus — 223

Pygmalion — 234

3 Mutual love in the Metamorphoses: towards the ultimus ardor of Latin elegy — 243

Pyramus and Thisbe — 252

Cephalus and Procris — 268

Ceyx and Alcyone — 292

Pomona and Vertumnus — 318

Conclusions — 339

Bibliography — 351

Index of Passages Cited — 369

Index of Names and Subjects — 377

Acknowledgements

This book is a thoroughly revised version of a Ph.D. thesis at the University of Zaragoza.

The transformation of the thesis into this book has been a long and arduous work. Its solitary course accounts for any faults that this book may have, for which I apologize in advance.

My special gratitude is due to Gonzalo Fontana, whose teachings on love and power relations in Latin poetry crucially inspired this project. I am indebted to many people who have shared with me their comments on my project, or who have read the manuscript or parts of it. I am particularly grateful to Christiane Reitz, who encouraged me to publish this work. My thanks go also to Chris Whifton, who kindly read some parts of my manuscript. Not least, I deeply appreciate the comments of the anonymous readers of “Trends in Classics – Supplementary Volumes”, whose valuable help has improved this work.

I am indebted to Christopher Londa for his constructive help in matters of style and language and to the staff of Walter de Gruyter for their generous assistance during the production of this book.

Finally, the deepest of my thanks go to my wife María José. Without her support this book would have never found its way.

To my father and to my son

