

Contents

Laura Wright

Introduction — 1

Paul Kerswill

- 1 Dialect formation and dialect change in the Industrial Revolution: British vernacular English in the nineteenth century — 8

Emma Moore and Chris Montgomery

- 2 The dialect of the Isles of Scilly: Exploring the relationship between language production and language perception in a Southern insular variety — 39

David Hornsby

- 3 A new dialect for a new village: Evidence for koinéization in East Kent — 74

Jonathan Roper

- 4 The clergyman and the dialect speaker: Some Sussex examples of a nineteenth century research tradition — 110

Peter Trudgill

- 5 I'll git the milk time you bile the kittle do you oon't get no tea yit no coffee more oon't I: Phonetic erosion and grammaticalisation in East Anglian conjunction-formation — 132

Stephen Howe

- 6 Emphatic “yes” and “no” in Eastern English: jearse and dow — 148

Richard Coates

- 7 Steps towards characterizing Bristolian — 188

Jonnie Robinson

- 8 ‘I don’t think I have an accent’: Exploring varieties of southern English at the British Library — 227

Juhani Klemola

- 9 The historical geographical distribution of periphrastic do in southern dialects — 262

Index — 293

