After years of research and reflection, through exciting discoveries and deceitful tracks, a long journey in the company of young Tobiah, Azariah (the angel in disguise) and of course, the dog, my study of Tobit 6 reaches the great public. The prudent, constant and insightful supervision of Prof. Luca Mazzinghi, to whom goes my utmost gratitude, helped me in a special manner to reach this goal. In a complementary manner, the minute, competent and supportive co-supervision of Prof. Craig Morrison, to whom also goes my recognition, for his contribution to this achievement. Heartfelt thanks to you both. The list of those to whom I also ought to say thanks is long, after such lengthy a time to get to this point. Undoubtedly, a warmth thanks is due to my parents, José Gabriel and Elizabeth for their constant support and encouragement, as well as to my brothers and sister, to whom I dedicate the present work. Then to so many friends, priest, religious and lay people, whom I have encountered in this journey and in some way or another granted me their comprehension, aid and support. Friends from different countries where I sojourned during my research and who have been like angels of God in my path, particularly during some difficult moments gone through during the study years. My thankfulness goes especially to Francesco Cupelli, my Italian brother, Fr. Giuseppe Prencipe FSMI, Don Antonio Molle, Fr. Jeroen Smith and the community of Heilige Lodewijk Parochie (Leiden), Fr. Michel Remery and S. John Paul II Foundation, Prof. Dr. Holger Gzella, and to my spiritual director, Msgr. Daniele Libanori SJ. Sincere thanks also to my archbishop Msgr. Anuar Battisti, for his paternal and friendly encouragement and support, especially during these past years. Finally, my acknowledgement also to Dr. Albrecht Döhnert and his team at Walter De Gruyter for having accepted my study in the DCLS series, for the friendly attention received and the professional care of my work, and to the DCLS' editors for the editorial suggestions.

May the Lord of Heaven, to whom goes my most deep and heartfelt recognition and thanksgiving, grant them all His abundant mercy.
