

Acknowledgements

This book has required funding and much input from colleagues and friends who have helped me to improve my analysis and the presentation of my chapters. People I thank here for their help do not necessarily agree with all my conclusions and should not be taken as responsible for the claims made in this book. The book is based on a project funded by the Economic and Social Research Council (ESRC) under the Future Research Leaders funding scheme (Grant number K001922/1). Naturally, I thank the ESRC for making this research possible. It was completed while working on a child language acquisition project funded by the ESRC and the Arts and Humanities Research Council (ESRC/AHRC ES/P000304/1). I also thank the ESRC and the AHRC for their support. The project of which this book is an output was based at the Surrey Morphology Group (SMG), where I was introduced to canonical typology and where I developed many of the ideas presented in this book. I would like to express my heartfelt gratitude to the members of my research committee, namely, Greville Corbett, Matthew Baerman and Oliver Bond for their comments on early drafts of the chapters of this book. I extend my thanks to the other members or affiliated members of the SMG for comments and suggestions during dry-runs before conferences: Maris Camilleri, Marina Chumakina, Sebastian Fedden, Tim Feist, Michael Franjeh, Patricia Cabredo Hofherr, Alexandra Grandison, Alexander Krasovitsky, Irina Monich, Enrique Palancar, Tatiana Reid, Penny Everson and Lisa Mack. I am indebted to Eva Schultze-Berndt for helping me shape my early ideas on the overt verb classification hypothesis, and for insightful comments and suggestions since I began analysing data on this topic. I would like to express my profound gratitude to Marilyn Vihman, Virve Vihman and Dunstan Brown for reading and commenting on different chapters of this book and for their support during the time I took off from our child language acquisition project to complete the book. A special thank you to Marilyn for the regular video calls to discuss various aspects of the form and content of the chapters she read.

I would like to thank Kristine Hildebrandt, the editors of EALT and an anonymous reviewer for their insightful comments on my manuscript. I also thank Kristin Boergen and Birgit Sievert for helping me prepare the manuscript for printing.

I also thank Philip J. Jaggar for his feedback from my early days working on the topics investigated here and for comments on some parts of this book. Thanks to Alena Witzlack-Makarevich for answering my never-ending questions on R, Catherine Laing for helping on some R issues and Mark Allasonnière-Tang for producing the maps in Appendix A. For punctual questions and discussions on aspects of the work discussed here, and for feedback on some ideas developed here, I thank Felix Ameka, Hannah Gibson, Maarten Mous, John David Sapir and Norbert Vanek.

The chapters presented in this book were developed from multiple talks presented at different conferences, workshops and seminars between 2006 and 2019. For the feedback and insights I received, I thank the participants at four COST Action 31 workshops (Stability and Adaptation of Classification Systems in a Cross-Cultural Perspective) organised by Tekla Wiebush at: Humboldt University – Berlin 2006, Åarhus University 2009, The Hebrew University – Jerusalem 2010, and Ecole des Hautes Etudes en Sciences Sociales – Paris 2010 (Final Conference). I also thank the audience at the 10th International Cognitive Linguistics Conference – Krakow University 2007, the 3rd Language Documentation and Linguistic Theory (LDLT 2011) – SOAS, the 54th Linguistic Association of Great Britain (LAGB 2013) – SOAS, two meetings of the Association for Linguistic Typology (ALT 2013 Leipzig, & ALT 2015 Albuquerque), the 43rd Colloquium on African Languages and Linguistics (CALL 2013) – Leiden University, the 45th Annual Conference on African Linguistics (ACAL 2014) – University of Kansas, the 5th UK cognitive Linguistics Conference (UKCLC 2014) – Lancaster University, two World Congresses of African Linguistics (WOCAL, Kyoto 2015 & Rabat 2018) and the Many Facets of Agreement conference – University of Zurich 2019. I thank Tom Güldemann and the audience at a departmental seminar presented at the Department of Asian and African Studies, University of Humboldt in 2010, and Ellen Contini-Morava and John David Sapir and the audience at the presentation at the Department of Anthropology, University of Virginia in 2014. I thank William Guippori Diatta for sharing data from his botanical research on Eegimaa plants, which I include in my analysis of the noun class system.

Chapters II and VII are slightly revised versions of journal articles published in the Italian Journal of Linguistics (Sagna 2017) and Studies in African Linguistics (Sagna 2019a), respectively. I thank these journals for allowing me to include these chapters here.

I have a personal debt to many people who have helped me in different ways during the data collections, analysis and writing up of this book.

A very special mention to my many language consultants and my family in Senegal for looking after me and for answering my endless questions. I thank particularly Romélie Bassène, Gilbert Abouleute Sagna, Rolande Virginie Sagna, Catherine Bassène, Hilaire Bassène, Paul Honoré Bassène, Egnakky Bassène, Jean Christophe (Firiso) Bassène, Jérôme Alainda Bassène, and Aimé Tendeng. Without them writing this book would not have been possible. I also thank Anne-Cecile and Thierry for giving me a nice space in their Bolong Passion Bed & Breakfast and for looking after me during my writing retreats in Cap Skiring.

I reserve a very special thank you to my son Amay Speekendbrink-Sagna and my wife Zoe Speekendbrink for their patience, support and love during my long periods of absence to write this book. I extend this thank you to the Speekenbrink Family. Finally, I would like to express my gratitude to Candide Simard and Philip Hutton for welcoming me into their home during my time at the SMG.

I dedicate this book to my father, Maurice Nazaire Sagna, who passed away in September 2021, shortly before the publication of this book. His help was invaluable for my data collection and analysis. I also dedicate this book to Abasse Sory Bassène, Haresa Manga and Ignace Tendeng, three of my most regular language consultants who passed away before this book was completed, and to Jean Jacques Acoly Sagna (my brother), Marthe Raïssa Sagna (my sister), Françoise Guñesi Tendeng, Diara Ndiaye and many other cousins and friends who were among the 2000 people who died in the “African Titanic” (“Le Jóola” ferry). Their spirits have accompanied me throughout the writing of this book.
