The tenth-anniversary meeting of Studies in the History of the English Language (SHEL 10) took place at the University of Kansas (Lawrence, KS) in June 2017. Although “boundaries” was not a stated theme of the conference, this book emerged organically from the papers presented, and we supplemented the selected papers with additional, invited contributions on the same topic to produce this edited collection. While the book would obviously not have happened without the well-considered and thought-provoking chapters by the authors in the volume, many others have contributed substantially to the successful completion of the project. SHEL 10 was generously sponsored by the Office of Chancellor Bernadette Gray-Little, the College of Liberal Arts and Sciences, the Hall Center for the Humanities, and the English Department at the University of Kansas, as well as the American Dialect Society. The editing process was assisted by the gracious help of a number of colleagues in the field: our anonymous peer reviewers, who provided specific and detailed comments on the individual chapters; R. D. Fulk, who, in producing his Coda for this book, painstakingly read through the entire volume and offered very helpful editorial feedback; and Amanda Sladek and Molly Zahn, who read the Introduction and made a number of valuable suggestions. We also gratefully acknowledge Pam LeRow’s help with the index of this volume.

We are also grateful to Susan Fitzmaurice, co-editor of the TiEL series at Mouton, for her guidance and penetrating questions during the editing process, and Barbara Karlson at Mouton, who smoothly guided the production process.

Finally, we humbly acknowledge the support and patience of friends and family, who have heard us talk about this volume and its ideas for many years. Having patient and caring listeners matters a great deal in a project like this! Thank you, All!
