Dealing with the way in which an innovation, such as the Albergo Diffuso (AD), satisfies emerging tourism markets is no easy task. Firstly, I wish to thank Mr. Giancarlo Dall'Ara for his valuable help in revising an early draft of Chapter 2 that focuses on the AD hospitality model he himself engineered, and for encouraging me in studying further innovations embedded in the model. I fervently hope that the description I have provided of this model of hospitality is concise, exhaustive, and innovative enough to satisfy his prescriptions.

I want to thank all of the managers and staff of Alberghi Diffusi, the mayors of municipalities which host an AD, the investors, consultants, and others, who I omit to name simply for reasons of brevity, for affording me the great privilege of assisting them in the setting up of a sustainable tourism development process through the establishment of an AD, over the last two decades.

I would also like to thank Professor Luca Iseppi at the University of Udine in Italy, Professor Esther Munyri and the research staff at the Kenyatta University in Kenya, Professor Giovanna Bertella at the Arctic University of Tromsø in Norway, Professor Kazem Vafadari at the Ritsumeikan Asia Pacific University in Japan, Professor Rigoberto Lopez at the University of Connecticut in the United States, and, finally, all of the anonymous reviewers at De Gruyter for their enthusiasm in supporting the preliminary studies, for suggesting research boundaries, for assisting me to improve the book contents, and for highlighting additional directions for the research.

Last but not least, I want to thank any readers of this book in advance who wish to share their opinions regarding the issues discussed, give their feedback on its contents, or feel motivated to partner strategically in order to address any of the scenarios even more productively. I invite you to send an e-mail to: maurizio.droli@gmail.com. As usual, any residual errors of this book must be attributed to the author alone.
