Acknowledgments

Like many textual artefacts – medieval, print or digital – this volume is the product of an elaborate process involving multiple actors. We'd like to thank the British Association of Applied Linguistics (BAAL) for funding the seminar Historicising the Digital: language practices in new and old media (University of Leicester, June 2016) from which this book emerged. We are indebted to the seminar participants for their inspiring discussions and debates, as well as to all the contributors to the book for putting a compelling range of transhistorical approaches into practice, and to our anonymous external reviewers. Our particular thanks go to the series editors, Elizabeth Closs Traugott and Bernd Kortmann, for their continued support, enthusiasm and insightful feedback.
