

List of contributors

Caroline Tagg is Senior Lecturer in Applied Linguistics at The Open University, UK. Her research into language and digital technologies rests on the understanding that digital communication practices are deeply embedded into individuals' wider social, economic and political lives. She is author of The Discourse of Text Messaging, 2012, and Taking Offence on Social Media, with Philip Seargeant and Amy Aisha Brown, 2017.

Mel Evans is a Lecturer in English Language and Linguistics at the University of Leicester. Her research explores the relationship between language and identity, particularly in early modern English. She draws on sociolinguistic and pragmatic frameworks for interpretation, and experiments with interdisciplinary methods from linguistic, digital humanities and literary fields. Her most recent book, Royal Voices: Language and power in Tudor England is published with Cambridge University Press, 2020.

Elisabetta Adami is Associate Professor in Multimodal Communication at the University of Leeds (UK) and is editor of Visual Communication. Her research and publications use and develop a social semiotic approach to understand sign-making practices in digital environments, in place and in face-to-face interaction, with a recent focus on inter-, cross- and trans-cultural dynamics of meaning making and re-making.

David Barton is Professor Emeritus in the Department of Linguistics at Lancaster University, England and erstwhile Director of the Lancaster Literacy Research Centre. His most recent books, both co-authored and published by Routledge, are Language Online, 2013, Researching Language and Social Media, 2014, and Academics Writing, 2019.

Claudia Claridge is Professor of English Linguistics at the University of Augsburg, Germany. Her research interests include the history of English, text and discourse linguistics, (historical) pragmatics, intensification, and figurative language.

Matthew Collins is currently a PhD student and Research Assistant at the University of Birmingham, where he explores how linguistic and digital methodologies can inform our understanding of literary and creative texts.

Chris Culy has been a professor of linguistics and computational linguistics in the United States and Germany, where he also taught visualisation of linguistic data. In addition, he has developed linguistic and visualisation software for research projects ranging from ancient Latin to machine translation to a social history of early women professional photographers.

Ana Deumert is Professor of Linguistics at the University of Cape Town. Her research program is located within the broad field of sociolinguistics and has a strong transdisciplinary focus. In addition to publishing widely on a range of topics in sociolinguistics, she is a regular columnist for Diggit magazine.

Susan Fitzmaurice is a historical linguist interested in computational approaches to the investigation of semantic change and the lexicalisation of conceptual structures in English. She is currently Vice President and Head of the Faculty of Arts and Humanities at the University of Sheffield.

Korina Giaxoglou is Lecturer in Applied Linguistics and English Language at the Open University, UK, where she leads the Health Discourse Research Group. Her research on the sociolinguistics of mourning, narrative, and affect has appeared in edited volumes, special issues, and peer-reviewed journals including Pragmatics, Applied Linguistics Review, Discourse, Context and Social Media. She is a member of the steering group member for the International Death Online Research Network and Secretary for BAAL Language and New Media Special Interest Group.

Rodney H. Jones is Professor of Sociolinguistics and New Media at the University of Reading. His research interests include algorithms, online surveillance, and the pragmatic dimensions of human-computer interaction.

Dániel Z. Kádár is Chair Professor and Director of the Center for Pragmatic Research at Dalian University of Foreign Languages, China. He is also Research Professor and Head of Research Centre at the Research Institute for Linguistics, Hungarian Academy of Sciences. He is author of 23 books and edited volumes, published with publishing houses of international standing such as Cambridge University Press. He is co-editor of Contrastive Pragmatics: A Cross-Disciplinary Journal. His research interests include the pragmatics of ritual, linguistic (im)politeness research, language aggression, contrastive pragmatics and historical pragmatics. He is particularly keen on the research of Chinese language use. His most recent book is Politeness, Impoliteness and Ritual: Maintaining the moral order in interpersonal interaction (Cambridge University Press, 2017).

Joanna Kopaczyk is Senior Lecturer in Scots and English at the University of Glasgow. She is a historical linguist with an interest in corpus methods, formulaic language, the history of Scots and historical multilingualism. Her most recent co-edited collections include Historical Dialectology in the Digital Age (Edinburgh University Press, 2019) and Applications of Pattern-Driven Methods in Corpus Linguistics (John Benjamins, 2018). She has also published on The Legal Language of Scottish Burghs (Oxford University Press, 2013) and co-edited Binomials in the History of English (Cambridge University Press, 2017) and Communities of Practice in the History of English (John Benjamins, 2013).

Aino Liira is a doctoral candidate at the Department of English, University of Turku. Her research interests include medieval and early modern paratextuality, metadiscourse, and material philology, particularly the layout and design of manuscripts and early printed books.

Agnieszka Lyons is Senior Lecturer in applied linguistics at Queen Mary University of London, UK. Her research employs multimodal and mediated discourse analytic as well as ethnographic approaches to explore the discursive construction of embodied identity in polycentric migrant environments. She has published in Language in Society, Journal of Pragmatics and Social Semiotics, among others.

Colette Moore is Associate Professor of English at the University of Washington. She teaches and writes about the English language and its history, particularly in the fields of historical pragmatics, historical sociolinguistics, historical stylistics, and the history of standardization.

Emma Moreton is a Lecturer in Applied Linguistics in the Department of English at the University of Liverpool. Her current research uses corpus and computational methods of analysis to examine the language of historical correspondence data, with a particular focus on nineteenth century letters of migration.

Samia Ounoughi is a Senior Lecturer of English studies at Université Grenoble Alpes (France). She specialises in discourse analysis in corpora of mountain travel narratives.

Matti Peikola is Professor of English at the Department of English, University of Turku. He specialises in philology, textual scholarship and book studies in the late medieval and early modern periods.

Sirkku Ruokkeinen is a doctoral candidate at the Department of English, University of Turku. Ruokkeinen's research focuses on the linguistics of evaluation, paratextuality, and book history, and she is currently working on a dissertation on the evaluation of the sixteenth-century book.

Hanna Rutkowska is University Professor at the Faculty of English, Adam Mickiewicz University in Poznań (Poland). She has published books such as Orthographic Systems in Thirteen Editions of the Kalender of Shepherdes (1506–1656), Graphemics and Morphosyntax in the Cely letters (1472–88), and (co-edited with Jacob Thaisen) Scribes, Printers, and the Accidentals of their Texts. She is also the author of several articles and chapters on various aspects of historical orthography and historical sociolinguistics as well as on late medieval English morphosyntax.

Alison Sealey is Professor Emerita of Applied Linguistics at Lancaster University, UK. She has published extensively on the role of discourse in representations of the social world, often using corpus-assisted methods. Two current research interests are parliamentary discourse and discursive representations of the non-human.

Philip Seargeant is Senior Lecturer in Applied Linguistics at the Open University. His work focuses on language, politics and social media. His recent books include The Art of Political Storytelling, and The Emoji Revolution.

Riki Thompson is an Associate Professor of Rhetoric & Writing Studies at the University of Washington Tacoma. Her current research employs critical multimodal discourse studies to examine storytelling, identity construction, and how people find connection and belonging through digitally-mediated spaces.

Martine van Driel is a linguist affiliated with the University of Birmingham. Her research investigates reader response to new media such as online news reporting and podcasting.

Mari-Liisa Varila is a Lecturer at the Department of English, University of Turku. Her research focuses on late medieval and early modern English books and book producers from the perspective of book studies, material philology, and textual scholarship.

