

Acknowledgments

I hope for this book to be a small contribution to a larger discourse on style and cartooning. While flaws and mistakes are my own responsibility, any part of this book that readers may find useful is certainly, indirectly or directly, the result of conversations in a broad sense of the term. I have engaged with and taken my inspiration from the writings of many people, but there is also a long list of persons with whom I had the chance to converse personally and/or who personally provided help in various forms. The list includes but is not restricted to Cuno Affolter, Carole Ammann, Romina Beermann, Birgit Brüggemeier and Christoph Brüggemeier, Jane Cheng, Tahmid Chowdhury, Benoît Crucifix, Adam Delgado, Sophie Dubus, Jared Gardner and Elizabeth Hewitt, Léonard Graf and Anne-Laurence Graf, Servan Grüninger, Kamilla Hassen, Henry Jenkins, Hoor Jangda, Irmtraud Huber, Miraya Jun, Keren Katz, Inge Koch and Helmut Koch, Josh Kopin, Phil Kuert, Sabine Kuert, Michael Kühni, Karin Kukkonen, Stephen Langenthal, Maral Majlesain, Caitlin McGurk, John Miers, Thomas Nehrlich, Joanna Nowotny, Stephan Probst, Patricio Provitina, Roger Sabin, Kathrin Scheuchzer, Elisabeth Schmidiger and Toni Schmidiger, Charlotte Schmiegel, Nia Stephens-Metcalf, Bill Stranberg and Nicole Juppe, Matthew Spellberg, Julia Straub, Eszter Szép, Jan Noël Thon, Christoph Weber and Jennifer Jenkins. I also express my gratitude to De Gruyter Berlin, particularly Ulrike Krauss, Katja Lehming, Christine Henschel, and Mervin Ebenezer, as well as the ANGLIA Book Series editors.

Distinctive Styles and Authorship in Alternative Comics is the revised version of a PhD thesis defended at the University of Bern, which in turn resulted from a research project (100015_126581/1, 2011–2014) funded by the Swiss National Science Foundation (SNSF). During the research project and after its completion, I had the opportunity to discuss and co-author texts on cartooning and/or style in workshops, summer schools, colloquia, and publication projects, and I appreciate the multifarious ways in which these collaborations informed the book's final form as well. As for institutional and financial support in addition to that provided by the SNSF, credit is due to the IASH Graduate School (now Walter Benjamin Kolleg) and English Department, University of Bern; Swiss Study Foundation; Fondation Boninchi; Schweizerische Akademie der Geistes- und Sozialwissenschaften (SAGW); European Association for American Studies (EAAS); Central Saint Martins College, University of the Arts London; Dr. Joséphine de Kármán Foundation; Billy Ireland Cartoon Library and Museum and OSU's Department of English; English Department, University of Siegen; Volkswagen Foundation; German Association for American Studies (GAAS); John W. Kluge Center at the Library of Congress; Gesellschaft für Comicforschung (ComFor) and AG Comicforschung GfM; the juries of the Research Award 2014 of the Swiss Association for North American Studies (SANAS) and of the University of Bern's Faculty of Humanities Doctoral Dissertation Prize 2015.

Gabriele Rippl initiated and chaired the SNSF research project. She nurtured the progress of my PhD thesis with inspiration and academic expertise. She conjured up side projects and follow-up projects. I thank her for all of this and, most importantly, for her unfailing support. Chapter drafts went back and forth between me and Stephanie Hoppeler, my fellow SNSF project collaborator, co-teacher, and workshop co-organizer. Daniel Stein invited me to present excerpts of my research, offered constructive feedback, helped initiate follow-up projects – and eventually provided a new institutional home for my work on comics and literature at the University of Siegen. For all of this, I thank them wholeheartedly.

I would be remiss not to express how much I appreciate the cartoonists mentioned in this monograph – especially Art Spiegelman, Alison Bechdel, and Jason Lutes – for enriching the world with their art and storytelling. Though a few comics artists have seen their books become bestsellers, for many others cartooning remains a precarious career. I acknowledge that it is a privilege to read these works and freely engage with them. Related to this is a point worth mentioning regarding the illustrations in Distinctive Styles. While processing my PhD thesis into the monograph manuscript, I substantially reduced the number of figures. In collaboration with the publisher and the production team, we then ensured that the remaining ones would not surpass a certain standard height, so as to allow the monograph to remain within Fair Use policy. In order to support contemporary cartoonists and in order to fully appreciate the stylistic details of the images reproduced here in small size, I encourage readers to go out and purchase these and other quality comics whenever and wherever they can.

Finally, I thank Romy Etter, Ueli Etter, Jonas Etter, and Rebecca Etter for inspiration, assistance, love, and laughter. Christina Maria Koch inspired and supported this project with her brilliance, expertise, and affection. I am immensely grateful.
