

Acknowledgments

There were many discussions and organizations that contributed to the creation of this volume about German visual culture in the nineteenth century. The first conversation that plumbed the importance of considering the visual culture of nineteenth-century German-speaking Europe took place in the context of a course on “Book Illustration Processes to 1900” offered by Terry Belanger of the Rare Book School at the University of Virginia in the fall of 2016. That conversation continued in a larger setting and with more participants in a seminar on “Critical Nineteenth-Century Visual Cultural Studies” at the German Studies Association conference in 2017. The following year those ideas were expanded further and with the contributions of additional scholars at a symposium held in the Department of Germanic Studies at the University of Texas at Austin. That symposium was supported by generous funding from the German Academic Exchange Service (DAAD), the Texas Chair for German Studies, and several other units of the University of Texas at Austin including the Department of History, the Department of Art and Art History, the Texas Language Center, the Center for Design and Creative Technologies, and the Center for European Studies. Their contributions were vital to the intellectual exchange that led to this volume. The editors also thank Irene Kacandes, editor of the Interdisciplinary German Cultural Studies series at De Gruyter, for her support of this endeavor and her assistants at De Gruyter, Anja-Simone Michalski, Lydia White, and Myrto Aspioti. Finally, the editors want to thank all of the individuals involved in those preliminary events, including those whose work did not make its way directly into this volume, but whose ideas and comments inspired us and encouraged us to continue this project. Particular thanks are, of course, due to our contributors for their persistence, their patience with our process, and their inspiring work.
