Thank you to my readers, Dr Jenny Knight, Rosie Mulgrue and Emma Shukie; and to my reviewers whose feedback enabled the development of the book and the core ideas. I am grateful to Dr Erika Wong for designing the cover and Wai Choi Wong, whose magical photograph of the Yellow Mountain, China, adorns it. Thank you to librarians everywhere – but particularly at my institution, the University of Brighton – for “effortlessly” managing the essential knowledge resource. As a lecturer and researcher, I have privileged access to libraries and librarians globally. I am also indebted to colleagues at the Centre for Research in Innovation Management (CENTRIM) with whom I have worked on diverse and applied projects. Also, to Professor Lew Perren and Graham Clifford who helped me transition from researcher to teacher. Thanks also to Lee Humphries of Printed Matter Bookshop, who recommended and sourced many books for me through waves of the pandemic, and delivered them to my door in person! He is a member of a band of independent booksellers that keep value local and diffuse knowledge globally.
