

Contents

|  |     |
|--|-----|
| Preface and Acknowledgments   | 11  |
|  |     |
| Introduction: The Artist as a Poet  | 13  |
| Geographical and chronological scope of the book,and a brief prospect of the history of poet-artistsin Renaissance Italy | 19  |
| Nature of the sources; specifics and relevanceof the cultural context under consideration                                    | 25  |
| Purpose and structure of the book  | 28  |
|  |     |
| Looking at Michelangelo   | 33  |
| The example of the universal artist  | 33  |
| Antecedents and historical background of the model   | 37  |
| A special paradigm for Florentine artists?   | 41  |
| Memory, reception, imitation: Michelangelo's poetryamong the artists of the Medici court                                     | 46  |
| How to imitate Michelangelo?   | 52  |
| Cellini and Michelangelo   | 57  |
| The imitation of Michelangelo between Vasari and Bronzino  | 61  |
|  |     |
| A Literato's Recognition  | 71  |
| Varchi, the artists, and the Accademia Fiorentina  | 71  |
| Of pens, brushes, and hammers: the presence anddignity of the artists' poetry in Varchi's dialogues in verse                 | 79  |
| The main historical occasions for Varchi's dialoguein verse with artists   | 83  |
| Patron, broker, dedicatee: Varchi and the Florentine artsin light of his sonnet exchanges with artists                       | 92  |
| Disavowing art   | 112 |

|   |     |
|---|-----|
| Between Praise and Vituperation  | 119 |
| The poetic triumph of the Perseus  | 119 |
| General public, connoisseurs, and artists:categorizing the sculpture's audience | 123 |
| Artists' poems in praise of the Perseus                                      | 131 |
| “sì come s'usa nelle grandi scuole”   | 141 |
| The history of vituperative poems by artistsand the example of Cellini          | 147 |
| Self-defense poems  | 155 |
|   |     |
| The Problem of Patronage   | 165 |
| The gray areas of propaganda  | 165 |
| When art and poetry do not suffice: the case of Pilucca                             | 168 |
| Polemical streaks in Bronzino's reflection on Cosimo's patronage                    | 176 |
| Between courtly panegyric and artistic self-exegesis                                | 192 |
|   |     |
| Appendix   | 201 |
| Bibliography   | 251 |
| Plates   | 279 |
| Credits  | 287 |
| Index of Names   | 289 |

“I was touched to see that you had truly paid attention to some pages that I showed you. I did not take from that that they deserved attention. I regard that attention as a gift freely and generously given on your part. Attention is the rarest and purest form of generosity.”

Simone Weil, letter to Joë Bousquet (April 13, 1942)

