

Acknowledgments

This volume began as a cross-disciplinary workshop at the annual meeting of the Linguistic Society of America (LSA) in 2020. Thanks to the participants and attendees, we had a productive and enjoyable workshop, which led to both new insights and many more new questions. We are particularly grateful to Larry Horn and Ailís Cournane for their comments and questions during the workshop. We are thankful to the LSA for creating a venue for us to initiate this work, and to Allison Burkette for her vision in soliciting the volume and for the space that she gave us to develop it in the directions we chose. We learned a great deal from putting this volume together, and for this we are indebted to our contributors—both for their original contributions and for their work in reviewing and commenting on other contributions. We are also grateful to Natalie Fecher and Kirstin Boergen from De Gruyter for shepherding our project along the way to publication, and to Erica Hsieh from Penn State’s Center for Language Science for her contributions to the index. Last but not least, we thank everyone for their patience, and for sticking with us as we pulled all of the pieces together. In January 2020, we could not have imagined how much the world would change over the course of the next five years. We are proud of having produced the volume despite all of this, and particularly grateful to our contributors for their continued engagement with the work despite the upheaval. We dedicate this book to Cynthia’s baby Alexei and Frances’s babies Anjali and Ayaan, all of whom were born during the preparation of the volume. We are indebted to them and to our families for the support and inspiration they provided along the way.
