

Acknowledgements

This work is the result of many fruitful conversations and exchanges with members of the philosophy community, and could not have been completed without every single one. A few are worth special mention. John Norton was key in helping me to develop both my writing and the specifics of the ideas contained in this book. Johanna Seibt greatly improved my understanding of process ontology, and was integral in my ability to apply it to scientific theory and practice. Jim Woodward was integral throughout my career in pushing back against my ideas, and helping them to develop into more nuanced arguments. Erica Shumener was the central figure in my development as a metaphysician. Debra Nails helped me realize for the first time the difficulties of substance ontologies. In addition, conversations with Colin Allen, Nuhu Osman Attah, Gal Ben-Porath, Agnes Bolinska, Nora Mills Boyd, Anjan Chakravartty, Hasok Chang, Mazviita Chirumuuta, Kathleen Creel, Siska DeBaerdemaeker, Marina DiMarco, John Earman, Marian Gilton, Sara Green, Mahi Hardalupas, Jenan Ismael, Michel Janssen, Shahin Kaveh, Kareem Khalifa, Eleanor Knox, James Lennox, Michela Massimi, Dana Matthiessen, Sandra Mitchell, Nedah Nemati, Rose Novick, Cailin O'Connor, Paolo Palmieri, Morgan Thomson, David Wallace, Ken Waters, James Weatherall, Porter Williams, and Jennifer Whyte were essential for developing this work. Lastly, I thank my family for all their support.

