

Acknowledgments

This book is the result of the joint efforts of a transdisciplinary author collective representing both academia and practice. Yet, it is also a collective endeavor reaching far beyond the group of authors who have relied on the engagement and support of several other stakeholders and conversation partners that we wish to credit.

First and foremost, we wish to thank the courageous managers from private and public companies as well as civil society organizations who have participated and co-created our research on leadership paradox. Researching leadership paradox in practice is only possible if organizations and managers are willing to welcome researchers into their challenges and dreams. We are deeply grateful for their engagement – they are all role models in a world where we need just-in-time, relevant research more than ever!

From the research project Leadership GPS for New Times – From Comfort Zone to Competitiveness funded by the Industry Foundation we wish to credit the 11 participating companies: VELUX, DEIF A/S, Arne Pedersen A/S, Aasted ApS, Titan Wind Energy (Europe) A/S, KMC amba Grundfos, Knudsen Extrusion ApS, Lindpro A/S, Spæncom A/S, and Trelleborg Sealing Solutions AB. We also wish to highlight the contributions of researchers and consultants participating in this project in addition to the author collective: Mette Mogensen, supervisor, Work Environment in Denmark, External Lecturer, Copenhagen Business School and Roskilde University; Henrik Holt Larsen, Professor Emeritus, Copenhagen Business School; Signe Vikkelsø, Professor, Copenhagen Business School; Per Geisler, senior advisor, Danish Confederation of Industry; and Jørgen Andersen, vice president HRM, ambu A/S.

From the research project Long Lasting Leadership in Turbulent Times – Paradoxical Leadership in Practice funded by Royal Danish Defence College in collaboration with Aalborg University we wish to credit Head of Section Michael Pingel Hansen as well as managers, project managers, and employees with the Acquisition and Logistics Organisation, The Danish Ministry of Defence.

From the research project A Taste for Sustainable Fish supported by the Velux Foundations we wish to highlight the contributions of the Copenhagen Hospitality College (CHC), Project Manager Michelle Werther along with managers, faculty, and students at CHC in addition to Associate Professors Alice Juel Jacobsen and Mikkel Fugl Eskjær, Aalborg University.

We also wish to thank the many other companies and organizations who have participated in our workshops and seminars on paradoxical leadership over the last decade giving us the opportunity to sharpen our thinking and insights into paradoxical practice even further – particularly the Danish Confederation of Industry, NOCA – Network of Corporate Academies, Local Government Denmark, the municipalities of Billund and Fredensborg, the association of Danish HR Professionals, and not least Djøf trade union whose affiliated publisher, Djøf Publishers, published our first book (in Danish) on paradoxical leadership that was the springboard for developing this book (Nielsen, Mogensen, Bévort, Henriksen, Hjalager and Lyndgaard, 2019). Also, we wish to thank Jakob Larsen of Djøf Publishers for laying out the first version of some of the central illustrations used in this book.

In preparing this manuscript we have also relied on the insights and help from the De Gruyter team, including editor Steven Hardman, commissioning editor Faye Leerink, content editor Jaya Dalal, Project Manager Anne Stroka, Books Marketing Manager Heather Goss and freelance marketer Natalie Wills as well as De Gruyter Transformative Thinking and Practice of Leadership and Its Development series editor Bernd Vogel. We are excited to be part of this series and encourage readers to explore other volumes of this series.

Finally, we wish to thank our external peer reviewers, Associate Professors Josh Keller and Camille Pradies, for their constructive comments both in evaluating our initial book proposal as well as the final manuscript. Their constructive comments and insights have been much appreciated.

The gift of feedback is invaluable to paradox navigation in both research and practice, and we feel fortunate that the scholarly paradox community is as vibrant and curiosity driven as the managerial paradox navigators that we work with in practice.
