

Contents

Preface	v
Contributors	ix

Part I

General considerations

Reflections on the history of the study of universals: the example of the partes orationis Georg Bossong	3
Universals, explanations and pragmatics Hartmut Haberland and Lars Heltoft	17
Isomorphic, anisomorphic, and heteromorphic universals John E. Joseph	27

Part II

Syntactic categories and constructions

Towards a typology of voice Ineke Brus	45
Non-verbal predicability Kees Hengeveld	77
Impersonal constructions as a strategy for second-order predication Zbigniew Kański	95
Polarization as a universal of linguistic organization Juan Carlos Moreno	123
Towards a semantic typology of language Franz Müller-Gotama	137
A hierarchy of main predicate encoding Leon Stassen	179

On explaining double object constructions Lieve Van de Walle	203
“Nouny” and “verby” adjectivals: a typology of predicative adjectival constructions Harrie Wetzger	223
Part III
Morphemes and lexical items
Demonstratives and the localist hypothesis Walter De Mulder	265
Phraseological universals: theoretical and applied aspects Dmitrij Dobrovol'skij	279
Scopal quantifiers: some universals of lexical effability David Gil	303
Semantic integrality: a universal semiotic feature of language and perception Yishai Tobin	347
Foreground and background: Weinrich against Labov Carl Vetters	367
Lexical universals and universals of grammar Anna Wierzbicka	383
Author index	417
Language index	423
Subject index	425