Preface

The present volume represents substantially my doctoral dissertation, which was accepted by Duke University in the summer of 2001. Most of the text has undergone only minor revisions, although Chapters 7 and 8 have received some additional material.

I wish to acknowledge a number of persons who assisted in the production of this work. Thanks go first of all to my dissertation supervisor, E. P. Sanders, for his generous and helpful guidance during its writing. The other members of my dissertation committee, Richard B. Hays, D. Moody Smith, and Eric Meyers, also provided welcome support and advice at various stages of its development.

Special thanks are due to Richard Hays, who made the initial recommendation for publication to the editorial board of BZNW. I am grateful to Prof. Dr. Michael Wolter, and to all of the editors, for their acceptance of my book in that series. Dr. Claus-Jürgen Thornton at Walter de Gruyter offered excellent technical direction for the preparation of the manuscript, and saw to it that this volume should be published in a timely manner.

Finally, it is a pleasure to be able to name my father among those who read and commented on my manuscript. He followed the development of my thesis with interest and, when it was completed, made a number of valuable suggestions in preparation for publication. To him, and to my mother, I dedicate this book with gratitude and affection.
