Table of Contents

Preface	e and acknowledgements	vii
1	Goals and theoretical framework	1
1.1	Introduction	1
1.2	Contents of this monograph
1.3	Child language acquisition: Assumptions
1.4	Bilingual L1 acquisition
1.5	Language death, L1 attrition, and incomplete L1 acquisition
1.6	Linguistic studies dealing with speakers of Yiddish
1.7	Summary
2	The study	14
2.1	Introduction: Inherent problems in the study of obsolescent languages
2.2	The population
2.3	Pilot studies
2.4	The sample
2.5	Locating informants
2.6	Primary informants
2.7	Additional informants.
2.8	The interview
2.9	Data analysis
2.10	Summary
3	The language of incomplete L1 acquisition in the immigrant situation	28
3.1	Introduction
3.2	Proficiency continuum and personal-pattern variation in informants' Yiddish
3.3	What sort of speakers of Yiddish are primary informants?	30
3.3.1	Are primary informants semi-speakers of Yiddish?	30
3.3.2	Are primary informants native speakers of Yiddish?
3.4	Characteristics of primary informants' Yiddish	35
3.4.1	Phonological performance of primary and secondary informants	36
3.4.2	Compensatory narrative/discourse strategies	37
3.4.3	Scope and semantic characteristics of informants' lexicon
3.4.4	Intrasentential codeswitching
3.4.5	Verbal morphosyntax
3.4.6	Nominal morphosyntax
3.5	Summary
4	Social and sociolinguistic factors in the incomplete L1 acquisition of Yiddish amo
	primary informants	55
4.1	A sociolinguistic model of incomplete L1 acquisition in the immigrant situation	55
4.2	Speaker practice: Inadequate exposure	57
4.2.1	Inadequate exposure: Limited domains and registers
4.2.2	Inadequate exposure: One-way vertical communication
4.2.3	Inadequate exposure: Early termination of active use	58

4.3	Attitudes toward L1	60
4.4	Linguistic identity	63
4.5	Summary	68
5	Evidence of incomplete L1 acquisition in primary informants' speech: Choice of auxiliary in the present perfect tense
5.1	Introduction
5.2	The present perfect tense in Yiddish and other Germanic languages	70
5.3	Primary informants' use of the present perfect	71
5.4	Secondary informants: 'Full acquisition' speakers of Yiddish with L1 attrition	77
5.5	Bilingual and monolingual L1 acquisition
5.6	Bilingual L1 acquisition of German and English: Leopold (1970/1939-1949)
5.7	Bilingual L1 acquisition of German and English: De Houwer (1990) and the role of the dominant language
5.8	Conclusion
6	Conclusion	87
6.1	Summary of this monograph	87
6.2	Implications of the study
6.3	Directions for further research
Refere	nces	93
Index		101