This book is the product of the network Postcolonial Intellectuals and Their Publics (PIN) (2019–2022), an “Internationalization in the Humanities” project funded by the Dutch Research Council (NWO) and led by Sandra Ponzanesi (Utrecht University) in collaboration with Paulo de Medeiros at Warwick University (UK) and other European partners, including Graham Huggan, Max Silverman and John McLeod at the University of Leeds (UK), Mark U. Stein, Julian Wacker, and Felipe Espinoza Garrido at the University of Münster (Germany), Ana Cristina Mendes at the University of Lisbon (Portugal), Sabrina Marchetti and Shaul Bassi at Ca’ Foscari University of Venice (Italy), and Bolette B. Blaagaard at Aalborg University, Copenhagen (Denmark), and the associated partners including Daniela Merolla at INALCO (France) and Nelaam Srivastava at the University of Newcastle (UK).¹

The members of this network would like to thank the Dutch Research Council for supporting the important collaboration, conferences, and publications resulting from the network, including this final volume.

The editors of this volume, Sandra Ponzanesi and Paulo de Medeiros, would like to thank their respective institutions: Utrecht University, Department of Media and Culture Studies/Research Institute for Cultural Inquiry (ICON), in particular the Graduate Gender Studies Program and colleagues affiliated with this PIN network (Adriano José Habed, Jamila Mascát, Koen Leurs, Rosemarie Buikema and CQ Quinan, now University of Melbourne) and the Postcolonial Studies Initiative (PCI); and Warwick University, Department of English & Comparative Literary Studies, and the Warwick Research Collective in particular, for their support for this wonderful multi-year research, international, and interdisciplinary project. It follows up on another successful “internationalization in the humanities” project, also funded by the Dutch Research Council, namely Postcolonial Europe Network (PEN) (2011–2014).²

We are immensely grateful to our fantastic research assistant Kathi Ammann, who has managed to keep us on track, and faultlessly helped us through the many different hoops. Her skills and qualities were a true blessing for the, at times too overloaded, main editors. Also thanks to Isha Lahiri for her support in the final stages.
