This edited volume was planned in conjunction with my post-doctoral research on “scribal discourses of Wisdom and Torah,” a study that was done in acquiring my Habilitation at Université de Lausanne; it was produced with the support of the Swiss National Science Foundation (SNSF) and Université de Lausanne, which approved the biblical and scientific research conducted from May 2019 to April 2021. Essays in this book are based on articles presented at two international conferences. Firstly, the workshop entitled “Wisdom and Torah as Dynamic Modes of Scribal Discourse in Israel and Early Judaism: Beyond Biblical Genres and Traditions” was held in two sessions of EABS (Warsaw, Poland; 11–14 August 2019). Secondly, Institut romand des sciences bibliques (IRSB) at Université de Lausanne organised an international conference entitled “Was Wisdom Transformed into Torah in Second Temple Judaism” (18–21 April 2021). Further entries, not presented at either conference, were solicited to offer a more complete approach to the topic under discussion in this volume.

I would like to express a special thanks to a few scholars. Firstly, I would like to thank Prof. Thomas Römer (Collège de France) for his excellent advice and guidance in this project. During the SNSF project at Lausanne University, he generously offered financial and academic support, as well as several personal favours for me. Secondly, Prof. Konrad Schmid (Universität Zürich) thankfully allowed me to keep my office at Universität Zürich and supported other funding schemes for my employment in Switzerland. Thirdly, I thank the chief editor, Prof. Kristin De Troyer, for her invitation to publish this book in De Gruyter’s Deuterocanonical and Cognate Literature Studies series. In particular, I truly appreciate the support of Mr. Aaron Sanborn-Overby as well as the efforts and commitments of other individuals. Finally, Dr. Seth Bledsoe (Radboud University) thankfully accepted my suggestion to join me as the co-editor of this volume; he has been of great help in finalizing this volume.
